It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PRESTON

IN

LANCASHIRE.

PRESTON, a market town, borough, and parish, locally situated on the river Ribble, in the hundred of Amounderness, County Palatine of Lancaster.

“ Since this place in length of time was ruined by war, or as the common people think by an earthquake, lower down, where the Ribell receives the tide, and is called by the geographer BELLISAMA ÆSTVARIVM near Penwortham, where, in the Conqueror's time was a castle, as appears from that prince's survey, out of the ruins of Riblecester arose Preston, a large, and, for these parts, handsome and populous town, so called from religious persons, as much as to say Priest's town. Below it the Ribell receives the Derwen, a small river, which first waters Blackborne, a noted market town, so called from a black water; which formerly belonged to the

Lacies, and gave to the tract adjacent the name of Blackburnshire. Thence it passes by Houghton Tower, which gave name to a famous family that long resided at it; and Waleton, which William, lord of Lancaster, son of king Stephen, gave to Walter de Waleton; but it afterwards belonged to the famous family of the Langtons, which derive themselves from the Walton's. But to return.

“Preston before-mentioned is vulgarly called Preston in Andernesse for *Acmundesse-nesse; for so the Saxons called this part of the country which runs out with a long compass between the rivers Ribell and Cocar, and forms a promontory resembling a nose, and afterwards called Agmonder nes. In the Conqueror's time it had ‘only sixteen villages inhabited, the rest lying waste,’ as we read in Domesday book†, and it was held by Roger of Poitou. Afterwards it belonged to Theobald Walter, from whom the Butlers of Ireland derive themselves: for so we find in a charter of Richard I. ‘Know ye that we have given and by this present writing confirmed to Theobald Walter for his homage and service all Agmondernes with its appurtenances, &c.' This tract yields plenty of oats, but will not bear barley. It has rich pastures especially on the sea side which is partly champain, whence great part of it seems to be called the File, q. d. the Field, though in the Tower rolls it is called by the Latin name of Lima, which signifies the instrument used to polish iron. But because it is in some places marshy it is accounted unhealthy. The little river Wyr runs swiftly through it, from Wierdale, a wild desart, by Grenhaugh castle, which Thomas Stanley, first earl of Derby of this family, built when his life was in danger from certain of the nobility of this county who had been proscribed, and whose estates Henry VII. had given him. They often assaulted him, and continually ravaged his lands, till the moderation of that excellent man prudently extinguished their resentments.

* Ακμυνη Ισθμός. See the records of the church and monastery of York under Ripon. Gale MS. n.

† Q. If Mr. Camden does not confound this with Preston in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, which also belonged to Roger de Poitou, Domesd. f. 332. Lancashire was included in the counties of York and Chester at that survey.

“ In many places on this coast one sees heaps of sand, on which they pour water till they contract a salt-ness, which they afterwards boil over turf fires to white salt*. Here are likewise some quicksands as they are called, so dangerous to travellers, who take the shortest way when the tide is out, that they ought to be particularly careful that they do not suffer ship-wreck at land, as Sidonius expresses it: but particularly about the mouth of the Cocar, where as it were in a land of quicksands stands Cockersand abbey, a house of Cluniacs, formerly founded by Ranulphus de Meschines, but exposed to the violence of the winds between the mouths of the Cocar and Lune or Lone, and having an extensive command of the Irish sea.

“ This river Lone or Lune rising in the Westmoreland hills runs southward between craggy banks and an unequal channel, enriching those who live on it in the summer months with a fine salmon fishery; which fish delighting in clear streams and sandy flats come in shoals to this and other rivers on this coast. As soon as it visits Lancashire the little river Lac unites its waters with it from the east, where now is Over Burrow, a mean country village, which the inhabitants told us was a great city, and occupied large fields between the Lac and Lone, and suffered all the miseries of famine before it surrendered, according to the tradition handed down to them from their forefathers. Certain it is that this place asserts its antiquity by various monuments of antient date, as stones with inscriptions, tessellated pavements, Roman coins, and this new name which points out to us a burgh. It must owe the recovery of the name to others not to me, though I have sought it with unwearied diligence; nor is the reader to expect that I should point out the name of every town in Britain mentioned by Ptolemy, Antoninus, the Notitia, and the classic authors. If, however, I might be allowed to conjecture, I should readily suppose it from the distance from Coccium or Ribblechester to be BREMETONACVM, which Hieronymus Surita the Spaniard has justly in his notes on Antoninus distinguished from BREMENTVRACVM.

“From this Burgh the river Lone passes by Thurland, a castle of the Tunstalls, built by Thomas Tunstall knight of the garter, in Henry VI. when the king had given him leave ‘to fortify and kernell, i. e. embattle his house:’ and Hornby a noble castle, founded by N. de Mont Begon, and owned by the Harringtons and Stanleys, barons Mont Eagle, descended from Thomas Stanley first earl of Derby*. The 3d and last of them William Stanley left Elizabeth his only daughter and heiress, wife of Edward Parker lord Morley, mother of William Parker, whom king James invested with his grandfather’s title of

* And advanced to that title by Henry VIII. H.

Mont Eagle, and we and our posterity must acknowledge to have been born for the good of the whole kingdom. For, from an obscure letter privately sent to him, and by him most opportunely produced, the wickedest plot which the most accomplished villany could contrive, was detected when the kingdom was on the eve of destruction, when certain wretches, under the cursed mask of religion, lodged a great quantity of gunpowder under the parliament house, and waited to fire it and blow up their king and country in a moment."

The Borough of Preston in Amounderness.

Theobald Walters, son of Henry, son of Hubert, and brother to Hubert Walter, a bishop of Canterbury, obtained a grant of the fee of the Lordship of Preston, and the whole wapentake or forest of Amounderness, of Richard I. to hold by three Knight's fees. This grant bears date, 22d April, 1st Richard I. (being the Friday next ensuing his coronation.) In 6th Richard I. having such large possessions in this county, he was made sheriff thereof, in which office he continued till the 1st of John inclusive. He contributed very largely towards the redemption of king Richard I. as may be seen in Maddox's History of the Exchequer, page 412. His son Theobald, who married Maud, sister to Thomas Becket, a bishop of Canterbury, took upon himself the surname of Butler, upon being appointed butler of Ireland. Tosti, fourth son of Godwin, earl of Kent, being made earl of Northumberland, by Edward the Confessor, in the thirteenth year of his reign, anno 1056, then held Preston in Agmunderness, with divers hamlets thereunto belonging, which Featherston afterwards held, 28th Henry VIII.

Preston was made a burgh or borough by Henry II. in the twenty-sixth year of his reign, when the men thereof gave one hundred marks, to have by charter the same liberties that the men of Newcastle had, for the confirmation of which, they paid 2nd king John sixty marks and four chascurs or dogs. And in the next year the men of Preston were fined in ten marks and a palfrey, to have peace, touching a plaint which Theobald Walter had brought against them concerning the gibbet and gaol in Preston: their grants and liberties were also confirmed by Henry III. and Edward III.; all the distinct charters, with the recitations, are contained in charter granted by Elizabeth; two charters were subsequently granted by Charles II.

The church of Preston, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, was impropriated to the college of Leicester, and is now in the patronage of Sir Henry Hoghton, Bart. and has in its parish the chapels of Broughton, St. Lawrence new chapel, which, having no certain endowment, the Rev. Samuel Peploe, vicar of Preston, procured the queen's bounty for it in 1717. This Mr. Peploe was promoted from the vicarage of Preston to the see of Chester in 1725, and was succeeded at Preston by his son, who, in 1727, was presented by the Dean and Chapter of Chester, to the rectory of Northenden, or Northen, in that diocese, worth about 150*l.* per annum.

In 1322, 16th Edward II. in the octaves of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, Robert Bruce, entering into England, by Carlisle, kept on his way through Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancaster, to Preston, which town he burnt, as he had done others in the countries he had passed through; and, after three weeks and three days, says Mr. Holinshed, returned into Scotland without engaging.

Modern description of Preston.

Preston is an ancient borough town in Lancashire, pleasantly situated on a gentle elevation above the Ribble, about fifteen miles from the confluence of that river with the Irish sea, and in the centre of a country abounding in rich and varied landscapes. According to the opinions of some antiquaries, this town rose into existence on the decay of the ancient city of Ribchester, a city which is now reduced to the humble condition of a village, about eleven miles distant from Preston ; a priory was anciently erected here under the auspices of the earl of Lancaster, A.D. 1221, for the grey friars. The building which formed the seat of the institution was, subsequently to the dissolution of religious foundations, converted into a house of correction, and is now occupied in distinct private dwellings of the lowest description. The town was incorporated by Henry II. in 1160. By a subsequent charter granted in the reign of Henry III. the officers of the burgh were authorised to hold a guild merchant for the renewal of freedom to the burgesses and for other purposes. This privilege is made the occasion of great festivity. For a long time after their first institution the guilds were held at irregular periods, but they have now, for more than a century, been uniformly celebrated every twentieth year, commencing on the Monday next after the decollation of St. John, which generally happens in the last week of August ; the last was held in 1802, and the ensuing guild will commence on the 2nd of September, 1822. The amusements, which are of great variety and interest, continue for a fortnight ; but, for civic purposes, the guild books are open for an entire month. The body corporate consists of a mayor, (anciently a prefect or portgreve) recorder, seven aldermen or benchers, and seventeen capital burgesses, who, together, form the common council of the borough. The mayor and two towns bailiffs (anciently named pretors), and two serjeants or subministerial officers, are elected annually upon the Friday preceding the festival of St. Wilfrid, who was formerly the lord of this borough, and they are invested on the 12th of October following by a jury of twenty-four guild burgesses. The members of the council, with the exception of the mayor, retain their seats for life, or during the pleasure of a majority, and vacancies are supplied by the remaining members. The town sends two representatives to parliament, and affords a practical example of universal suffrage; every male inhabitant, whether housekeeper or lodger, who has resided six months in the town, and who has not, during the last twelve months, been chargeable to any township as a pauper, having a right to vote for two candidates at elections. This principle was established by a decision of the house of commons, on an appeal in the year 1766, and has ever since been acted upon.

During the greater part of the last century the town was much resorted to, as an agreeable retirement, by old and respectable families; but having, during the last twenty or thirty years, become the seat of very extensive manufacturing establishments, the character of the inhabitants has undergone a consequent change. This change was in a great measure brought about through the spirited exertions of a single individual, the late Mr. John Horrocks, who in the year 1791 commenced, nearly without capital, a small manufacture of muslin, and taking advantage of the important improvements then introduced in the art of cotton spinning, he formed several establishments in this branch of business, and in the course of a very few years became the master or principal owner of no less than six large factories, and obtained interest sufficient to secure his return to parliament, without opposition, at the general election in 1802.

The population of the town had been nearly stationary for a full century previous to the year 1790, and generally estimated at about 6,000 persons; in 1801 the number was 11,887; in 1811, 17,065, and in July, 1819, the number of inhabited houses was found to be 1,546; uninhabited, including new buildings, 170, and inhabitants 21,958. The money raised by the poor's rates in 1803, was 3120*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*

at 4s. 3d. in the pound. The streets are generally broad and well paved ; the houses are almost entirely built of red brick, and slated ; but the town cannot, as yet, boast much in respect to public buildings.

The Guildhall, which stands near the market place in the centre of the borough, is a handsome brick building, and contains a news room, council chamber, and court room, which last is used as the hustings at elections ; right over the entrance into the town hall, are the town arms, with emblems of war. The original town or moat hall were destroyed on the 3rd of June, 1780 ; a ball had been held in it the preceding evening ; the present edifice is built on the scite of the former, and was finished 1782.

The market place is large and nearly of a square form, consisting of elegant shops ; an obelisk is placed in the centre, on the summit of which is a gas light, with a reflector, which serves to illuminate the whole of the place, which is four thousand square yards.

A literary and philosophical society was established here in March 1810, and honoured by the names of many eminent characters : the first newspaper, which was published weekly, appeared in 1745, under the title of “the British Courant, or Preston Journal.”

There are two churches ; St. John’s formerly dedicated to St. Wilfrid, who was Archbishop of York; the first stone of the tower was laid June, 1814; the steeple was reared October 25, 1815; the chancel was opened, after being rebuilt, 20th March, 1818; and Trinity Church, the first stone of which was laid on the 4th June, 1814; there are likewise several chapels of ease to the above. The vicarage is valued in the king's books at 15*l.* 13*s.* 11½*d.*

The proportion of Roman catholics is, perhaps, greater here than in any other town in England. This body of Christians possesses two large chapels, St. Wilfrid, and St. Mary; the former is said to be the largest in the kingdom, and both of them are generally well filled. The methodists have also a large meeting-house, and there are slender congregations of independents, baptists, presbyterians, quakers, and unitarians.

The theatre royal is an extensive building, very commodious, and well adapted for the drama, is situated in the S. of Fishergate, and was built in 1802.

The assembly room, built at the sole expense of the Earl of Derby, measures thirty-two feet by twenty-four, and is a very elegant building; there are likewise several billiard rooms, public and private.

The cockpit is a capacious building, situated near Stonygate, it is used only during the races, and is under the patronage of the Earl of Derby; this place is now used as a Sunday school.

The music academy is erected in Cannon street, and is well adapted for the purpose.

The cold bath is situated at the foot of Spa-brow, near the bleach works, very conveniently fitted up, and much resorted to in the summer months.

Avenham gardens, with the warm and cold baths erected by Mr. Jackson, situated in the slope of the hill facing the river Ribble.

Earl Derby's house is a magnificent structure, and when seen from the main street has a princely appearance.

The public offices belonging to the County Palatine of Lancaster are kept in this town. The quarter sessions for the hundreds of Amounderness, Blackburn, and Leyland, are also held here; and there is a house of correction built on the plan of Howard, and at present under excellent management. A gas company was established here in 1815, being the first of the kind successfully formed after those in the metropolis. The Ribble does not admit vessels of large burden, on which account the maritime trade of the town is at present confined to the western coasts of Great Britain, and some of the ports of Ireland. The river is, however, capable of being rendered navigable for vessels of sufficient magnitude to carry on an intercourse with America and the West Indies, and a subscription has been lately entered into for procuring a regular nautical survey of the channel. The public foundations of the town are a dispensary; it was first established in commemoration of the jubilee in October, 1809, the number of in and out patients admitted from its commencement to October, 1819, was 16,045; a house of recovery, established June, 1813, for preventing contagious diseases; the ladies' charity for the relief of pregnant women; the benevolent society instituted 1812; the catholic charitable society, instituted 1731; the vaccine institution; the almshouses and workhouse which stands upon Preston Moor; a national school, established in 1815, to which was annexed the blue schools, on the system of Dr. Bell; a catholic school, established in 1814, and a methodist school, also conducted on the new system; a free grammar school, situated at Syke Hill, for the gratuitous instruction of freemen's sons in classical literature, but which few of the freemen now avail themselves of, and several other minor institutions. The principal market, which is very plentifully supplied, is held every Saturday; besides which, there are markets for fish and vegetables every Wednesday and Friday; 31 miles from Liverpool, the same distance from Manchester, 22 S. of Lancaster, 15 from Wigan, and 214 N. W. of London.

This town likewise possesses a valuable and extensive library situated in Shepherd street, it was founded by Dr. Richard Shepherd, a physician, who was twice mayor of this borough, and who died 28th November, 1761; he left the interest of 1,000*l.* for its support and enlargement, to the mayor and aldermen for the time being, who grant tickets of admission thereto during certain hours of the day; but it is to be lamented that this town does not yet possess a public library to which men of business, and especially the rising generation, can have access at their short periods of leisure.

The House of Correction at Preston being the best disciplined place of the sort in England, the following account of it, by Mr. Nield, in a letter to Dr. Lettsom, was thought worthy of insertion; it is printed from the original.

“ William Halstead, keeper; salary 130*l.* (out of which he pays 12*s.* per week to a turnkey) and a plot of ground worth 20*l.* per annum. Fees none. For the conveyance of prisoners to Lancaster, Wigan, and Ormskirk, 1*s.* per mile. Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Wray; salary 20*l.* Duty; Sunday morning; prayers and sermon. Surgeon, Mr. Birdsworth; salary 10*l.* and makes a bill. Task-master, Thomas Houghton; salary 50*l.* and five per cent. on the gross earnings of the prisoners; he has a man to assist him, whom the county allows 12*s.* a week. Number of prisoners 1st October, 1802, men one hundred and fifteen; women forty-five; total one hundred and sixty.

Allowance. Every day breakfast and supper: seven ounces of bread, two ounces of oatmeal, one quarter of an ounce of salt, each meal, boiled into gruel. Dinner, Sunday and Thursday, half a pound of beef with the bone, seven ounces of bread each, one pound of potatoes, and water to drink. Monday and Friday, seven ounces of bread each, and one quart of peas with vegetables, to ten prisoners. Tuesday and Saturday, a stew of cow-head and shins. Wednesday, seven ounces of bread, and four ounces of cheese each.

This prison is a little way out of the town, near the church gate bar ; and is surrounded by a boundary wall, which being at a distance from the prison, the keeper has within it a convenient garden.

On one side the entrance is the turnkey's lodge, on the other is the office of the clerk of the peace. Up-stairs are two reception cells, where prisoners are examined before they are admitted into the interior of the prison ; there are likewise rooms for the turnkey's family. For prisoners there are six airy courts about twenty-two yards by twelve each ; four of which are for men, and two for women, with water, and a sewer in each. To every court-yard there is a day-room, the average size about five yards square. On the ground floor are eighteen sleeping cells, seven feet six inches, by six feet six inches, with vaulted roofs ; there are sixteen other cells, but, being very damp, were not used to put prisoners in. There are likewise on the ground floor forty-eight workshops, in which thirty-one pair of looms were employed when I was there. On the first story are fifty-two sleeping cells, the size of those below ; and on the upper story fifty-three. Each cell is fitted up with a wood bedstead, straw in sacking, two or three blankets, and a quilt ; ventilated by an aperture over the door, and an iron grated window opposite. There is an excellent kitchen, fitted up with every convenience for frugal cookery. A room with a bath, in which every prisoner is washed previous to trial. Each prisoner has clean linen every Sunday, and all are required to attend divine service, unless prevented by sickness. The chapel, which is in the centre of the building, has a cupola on the top, and is partitioned so that the men and women cannot see each other. There are two large workrooms up-stairs, in one of which were six pair of looms, and the other is used for batting cotton. Two rooms are set apart for infirmaries ; but, as there were no sick prisoners at my visit, shoemakers and tailors were at work in one of them. The rules and regulations for the government of the prison are conspicuously stuck up in various parts. The court or session house is within the walls, and convenient passages lead into it for prisoners on trial. Act for preservation of health and clauses against spirituous liquors both hung up ; the prison clean. Number of prisoners, 24th October, 1805 ; men forty-two, women seventy ; total one hundred and twelve. It being the dinner hour when I made this visit, I was much pleased with the order and regularity of the prisoners' behaviour, and the attention with which it was served. The keeper was out on business: it therefore could not be accidental, but method; and indeed he appeared to me, on both visits, to be well calculated for the important trust. The total amount of earnings and disbursements, from Easter sessions 1802 to Easter sessions 1803, was as follows, viz.

Do. necessities for manufactory, oil, batting-sticks, &c.	5	0	6

These prisoners have the other moiety of William Edmundson's legacy, mentioned in the list at Lancaster; it amounts now to 2*l.* 10*s.* per annum, and is the only benefaction to this prison. It is distributed as follows: every New Year's day each prisoner receives a loaf of fine bread, value three halfpence, six ounces of cheese, and a pint of ale; and what the legacy is short of that allowance, is made up out of the earnings. They have likewise a holiday every New Year's day in the afternoon.

Debtors arrested by the process issuing out of the borough court for sums under 10*l.* are sent here. At my visit in 1802, I remarked a total neglect of cleanliness in the court-yards of this prison, and for want of a drain the uncovered deposits were extremely offensive. Dung-hills up to the very windows of the workshops, and a hog-stye in another part; and I am sorry to observe, that there was no alteration at my last visit, 23rd October, 1805. I am informed that it is intended to vault or cover them over next summer; but I think the nuisance cannot be removed without a regular drain is made for so crowded a place; it would then be an excellent prison.

The form and manner of the Government of this town.

The mayor for the time being, according to a guild order made in the reign of Edward III., 1328, on the Monday previous to the election of his successor, summons the bailiffs to appear before him and the burgesses, to pass the accounts of their stewardship for the year, charging themselves with all monies received belonging to their office, and likewise stating what payments they have made according to any orders given by the aforesaid mayor and council to them to dispose of; and after passing their accounts, the said bailiffs have till Candlemas day to gather in their arrears and finish their accounts; after which the mayor with his burgesses and other invited guests and friends have a public dinner out of the revenues of the borough, which feast is called the privy accounts dinner, and the evening following the mayor and his brethren meet again upon the town's affairs, and for the election of new officers for the ensuing year; and the present mayor, in the week before the election court, causes the serjeant to summon all the inhabitant burgesses personally to appear at the said court, and when the election court approacheth, one of the serjeants, early in the morning, ringeth the town's bell to put the burgesses in mind of their duty to appear in that court, which he again repeats at ten o'clock, and likewise at two in the afternoon, when the mayor, with his brethren and burgesses, appeareth in the hall for keeping the said election court.

The bellman of the borough crieth aloud O'yes, which signifies to open the court in due form: when silence is proclaimed, whilst the bailiffs' accounts are examined and duly made up. Afterwards the bellman reiterates O'yes three times more; the town clerk calls upon the inhabitant burgesses personally to appear, from the court roll book. When the court roll book is once called over, and in case of all the burgesses not appearing, a new proclamation is made, in the open streets, and on their not appearing at this second call, shall be fined in the sum of 3s. 4d.; and on the third call, not appearing, shall be fined 6s. 8d., unless the mayor or town clerk, otherwise excuses them in some particular or extraordinary case of emergency, whereby they possibly could not attend. After which the town clerk enters the formulæ of this election court in the following words:—"And here you may perceive, that this court of election was one of the grand three portmotes formerly in use within this our borough of Preston, during the Saxon era, unto which all burgesses, under a penalty, were then bound to appear, as has been declared heretofore." The mayor then stands up, and nominates a person fitting for the office, to fill the office of one of the elisors, in order to nominate a jury. The senior alderman, having received advice from his brethren in office, and the capital burgesses of the borough, in behalf of the common burgesses or freemen, to whom in former days the choosing of a second elisor belonged, do likewise choose another person to be an elisor, in unison with the former; which two elisors are to nominate and duly elect twenty-four right and worthy persons to be regularly impannelled as a jury; twelve of which shall be taken out of the body of those called capital burgesses, and the other twelve to be chosen out of the common burgesses of the borough of Preston. The following oath is then administered to the elisors:—

" You two are elected and chosen to be electors, commonly called elisors, within this our borough, and the franchises thereof: you shall therefore elect and choose twenty-four honest and discreet burgesses, inhabitants within this said town, and such as are burgesses of the last guild merchant; which twenty-four, so by you to be chosen, are to elect one honest, wise, and discreet person, to be mayor; one honest, wise, and discreet person to be bailiff; and one honest, wise, and discreet person to be sergeant: and the names of the twenty-four, so by you chosen, shall be presented to your said worshipful the mayor, with all convenient speed.

“ So help you God.”

During the time occupied by the two elisors, in consulting and making up a list of the jurors' names, to be by them presented to the mayor, the sergeant, in the mayor's name, shall specially invite the gentlemen and burgesses that attend this election court, to adjourn for the space of half an hour, and to attend his worship the mayor to the sergeant's house, or any other he has previously appointed, and then and there to regale themselves most heartily with ale, cake, fruit, &c.

When the elisors have perfected their list, notice is given to them, in order that they may return to their duty at the Moot-hall. The sergeant then maketh proclamation, summoning orally all persons to make their special appearance in open court, which of late was adjourned for the space of half an hour, concluding with God save our lawful sovereign. The schedule containing the twenty-four names elected and duly chosen by the elisors, is delivered into the hands of his worship the mayor, who peruses the same, and then delivers it to the grand seneschal, or town clerk, who orders, by proclamation, that all such persons, and burgesses of the borough of Preston, do stand duly elected to be right and lawful jurors, as aforesaid, and that they must answer to their respective names, and present themselves upon the first call. Then they are duly called, separately; upon making their personal appearance in open court, his worship the mayor, perusing the schedule, immediately nominateth one of the number, being a capital burgess of the borough, to be the foreman of the jury, according to ancient and lawful usage. After which he tendereth the following oath to the foreman only :—

“ You, with the rest of your brethren, are appointed to elect and choose one mayor, one bailiff, and one sub-bailiff, commonly known by the name of the town’s sergeant; you shall also elect and choose one honest, wise, and discreet person, to be mayor of this town, for the next year, beginning at the feast of St. Wilfrid, now next ensuing; one other honest, wise, and discreet person, to be bailiff of this town, called and known by the name of town’s bailiff; and one other honest, wise, and discreet person, to be sub-bailiff, commonly called the town’s sergeant; which three aforesaid persons, chosen by you, to serve in the several offices aforesaid, shall be inhabitants within this our said borough, and also shall have been burgesses of the last guild merchant, and such persons as you, in your consciences, shall think fit to use and exercise the said distinct offices, for the good and welfare of this town, and the franchises thereof.

“ So help you God.”

The following oath is administered to the residue of the jurors :—

“ The aforesaid oath which B. C. your foreman, on his part, hath duly taken ; you, and every one of you, shall severally perform, on your part.

On the jurors being duly elected and sworn, they immediately adjourn to the council-house, or chamber, at the door of which the sergeant keepeth watch, lest they be interrupted, or overheard, by any person or persons, during these their deliberations: in this place they are bound to remain, without any meat, drink, fire or candle-light, until all and every of them coincide with each other, upon the charge given in to them. Being therefore all of one mind, they are upon this called into court, and each answering to his respective name, the foreman delivers a schedule of their perfect agreement, containing the names of an elect mayor, town's bailiff, sub-bailiff, or town's sergeant; as was given for their verdict in this case to them. Which new elect, if not present in court, (as it generally happens he is not,) they send for him ; also for the elected bailiff, and sub-bailiff, or town's sergeant. The present mayor then declareth, upon their making their appearance in court, that the jury duly chosen upon this occasion, have freely elected and chosen him for a person fitting to fill the office of supreme magistrate for the succeeding year, thinking that he is a person most worthy of that high office, and in his opinion will reflect honour and reputation upon the borough, and therefore wishes him, without murmur, to accept of the office, wherein he is so unanimously chosen by the jurors, and for to take the respective oaths belonging to the high office of chief governor of this town.

The oaths of allegiance and supremacy are therefore duly tendered to him, which may be seen in Burn's Justice, on reference thereto. The two oaths aforesaid, conclude with the following declaration :—

“ I, B. C., do declare and believe, that it is not lawful, upon any pretence whatsoever, to take up arms against the king ; and that I do abhor that traitorous position, of taking arms by his authority, against his person, or against those that are commissioned by him.

“ So help me God.”

Then he subscribeth the following declaration :—

“ I therefore well and truly do declare, that their lies no obligation upon me, or any other person, from the oath knowñ by the name of the ‘ Solemn League and Covenant ;’ and moreover, that the same was in itself an unlawful oath, imposed upon the subjects of this realm, against the known laws and liberties of the kingdom.

Signed “ B. C.”

The bailiffs’ oath is administered as follows :—

“ You shall therefore well and truly use and exercise the said office of bailiff, during the time of your appointed office, and keep all and every of such office, in all its parts, whole and entire, in all cases of plaintiff, at whose suit or suits, such person or persons were lawfully arrested, and taken into execution within this borough, for any debt or trespass, and to be fully satisfied of his said debt, costs, and damages, to him adjudged ; except you otherwise shall lawfully be discharged thereof. You shall also safely keep within your said prison, within your jurisdiction, all such other person or persons, goods and chattels, as shall be lawfully arrested within the borough, until such time as such person or persons, goods or chattels, be duly discharged by sufficient bail therein given, or otherwise provided for. You shall also, from time to time, during your said office, at and by the appointment and orders of his worship the mayor, and the rest of his brethren, or the major part of them, disburse and lay down all and every kind of needful and regular charges and other disbursements, as to the worshipful the mayor, and his brethren, or the major part of them, as shall be thought right, just, lawful, and proper for the public weal of this town, and the franchises thereof. And also maintain, repair, uphold, perform, and do all matters and things, which the bailiffs of this town, and their predecessors in office, have usually been wont to do, and which may tend, in every degree, to the public benefit and welfare of this our borough of Preston, its franchises and liberties thereof. You shall expose, and inform his worshipful the mayor, of all faults and misdemeanours which shall come to your knowledge, and known to have been committed within this borough, or the franchises or liberties thereof, during the whole time of your servitude, in this your aforesaid office. You shall also maintain, uphold, and set forth, all laudable rites and customs, as have been originally used and practised within this town, by the bailiffs of the said town, your predecessors in office, for the welfare and honour of this borough, and the franchises and liberties thereof: and according to such orders and regulations as have been originally agreed upon by the worshipful the mayor, and the rest of his brethren in office, the common councilmen of the town. You shall also gather all monies, and discharge all debts, as by virtue of this your office, you ought, and shall collect, within this town, or which during the time of your said office, you or either of you shall be indebted or shall owe unto his worship the mayor, bailiff, or burgesses of the town, by reason of your said office, before the feast day of the purification of our blessed lady the Virgin Mary, next ensuing the day of your accounts.

The town sergeant's oath. But observe, the very same oath which precedeth the oath of the mayor and bailiffs, is also administered to the sub-bailiff, or town's sergeant, who likewise takes this oath, which is as follows, viz.

“ You are duly elected, and chosen to the office of town's sergeant for the next ensuing year, and shall therefore well and truly execute and exercise the aforesaid office, known by the name of the town's sergeant, within this our borough of Preston, in Amounderness, in the county of Lancaster, together with its franchises and liberties thereof, from the feast day of St. Wilfrid, the archbishop, next forthcoming, until the feast day of St.

Wilfrid, the archbishop, then forthcoming, (that is to say) for one whole year, if you live till then, and so long continue in office, and from that day, until another person to your office is duly and lawfully sworn and elected, you shall obey your said worshipful the mayor, and him duly serve and revere, as pertaineth; and to the extent of your power, maintain the peace of the king's majesty, within this ancient borough, its franchises and liberties thereof. You shall also carry the toll-box, every market day, and during the times of fairs, following after the bailiffs of this town, and duly wait upon them, as becometh your situation, and give due assistance to them in the collecting and gathering of tolls, and other customs, belonging to his worship the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of this ancient and loyal town of Preston, during the time of your servitude in this aforesaid office. You shall likewise be ready to come to his worship the mayor, to ring the ordinary bell, every market day, and at all other times when his worship the mayor telleth you to do so; and at all other due and convenient times, during this your said office, you shall hold yourself in readiness to give assistance to the sergeant at mace, commonly called the mayor's sergeant, for all executions served by the said sergeant, within this our said borough of Preston, and the franchises and liberties thereof. And moreover, such person or persons' goods and chattels, as are held in bondage, by arrest or execution, you shall take into your custody, and the same safely keep, and deliver over, with all possible speed, unto the bailiffs of this town, for the time during the existence of this your said office. You shall not exact or extort from any person or persons, for or concerning the execution of this your office, any money, gift, reward, or any other thing whatsoever, than such lawful, just, and equitable fees, as originally have been allowed, and usually taken, by your predecessors the sergeants of the town, except it shall be otherwise ordained by the worshipful the mayor, and his brethren. You shall not take any money, gift, or reward, of any gamester or gamesters, which you shall find, or take any material belonging to any kind of play, or game, within this borough, during the time of your office, to the intent to bear or agree with, or with a view to oversee this their offence against the public morals of the inhabitants of this town. But all persons as you shall find so offending within this borough, its franchises and liberties, shall be brought before his worship the mayor, and supreme magistrate, or in certain cases, the same shall be made known to him without delay. And if you shall find, or know of any lewd, bad, or suspected person or persons, to be relieved, harboured, or kept at any house or houses, within this borough, the franchises or liberties thereof, you shall use your best endeavours to apprehend them personally, all and every one of them, or otherwise take them, or give information of them and their respective residence to your worshipful master, the mayor of this ancient and loyal borough, in order that they may be apprehended, and duly taken and put into custody, keeping this knowledge of the case to yourself, nor letting any other person or persons into the knowledge thereof, so that these villainous persons may betake themselves to flight, and thereby make their total escape out of the franchises and liberties of the borough. And further, you shall truly present to your master, his worship the mayor of the town, the names of all and every respective householder, as shall in any wise relieve, keep, or harbour all such lewd persons, known to your personal knowledge.

The oath of the mayor's sergeant is administered as follows :—

“ You are chosen to the office of sergeant, for the year ensuing : you shall therefore well and truly use and exercise the said office of sergeant at mace, commonly known by the title of mayor's sergeant, within this town of Preston, and the franchises and liberties thereof, from the feast day of St. Wilfrid, forthcoming, until the feast day of St. Wilfrid then next following ; (that is to say) for one whole year, if you live thereunto, and so long continue in the said office. You shall obey his worship the mayor, and attend upon him, at all convenient times, during the time of this your said office, and in as much as in you lieth, cause the king's majesty and peace to be preserved and fully maintained, within this town, its franchises and liberties thereof. You shall, in your proper person, make all arrests, and proclamations, and serve all manner of processes, and executions, between party and party, and all other things which shall in all manner appertain and belong to your office, to be done and executed within this town, and the franchises and liberties thereof, in such manner and form, as the sergeant at mace of the city of London do execute and perform, whether it be upon body or chattels, according to the warrant or warrants, which shall be directed unto you, for the due execution and performance thereof, without any demur or delay whatsoever, during the servitude of this your said office. And all such persons' goods and chattels, as you shall arrest or take into execution, you shall immediately deliver unto the bailiffs of this town, or one of them, or in case of their absence, to the sub-bailiff. You shall also keep his majesty the king's standard, both for weights and measures, during the time of your office, and all such weights and measures as shall be brought to you, to be made perfect and sealed, you shall justly and truly make and seal, without any deceit or corruption whatsoever, according to the ancient weights and measures now used, except you shall be otherwise ordered by the worshipful the mayor of the town, and his brethren. You shall see no tolls, or customs belonging to this town, during your office, to be withdrawn or taken away, during the bailiffs' absence, but you shall take, if found wanting, and deliver them up to the bailiffs of this town. You shall not exact or extort from any person or persons, for or in the execution of your said office, any money, gift, reward, or other thing whatsoever, than such regular and lawful fees, as originally have been granted and allowed, and taken by your predecessors the sergeants of this town. You shall not take any money, gift, or reward, from any common gamester, which you shall find at any unlawful play or game, within this town, its franchises and liberties, during the time of your said office, with an intent to overlook or bear in any degree, with these their unlawful offences, calculated to injure the public morals of the inhabitants of this borough of Preston. But all persons, so found by you, so offending in these cases, shall be immediately brought before your said worshipful the mayor, or you shall otherwise make the same known to him without delay. And moreover, if you shall find any loose, lewd, bad, or suspected persons, who are relieved, kept, or harboured within this town, its franchises and liberties thereof, you shall use your best endeavours to apprehend them, or otherwise without delay, shall bring them before your worshipful the mayor, to the end that they may be committed. You are not to give knowledge or warning, either by yourself, or by any other indirect means, to any persons, or to themselves, in anywise, lest they betake themselves to flight, and thereby escape without the franchise and liberties of the borough. And furthermore, you shall truly represent to your mayor, the names of all and every householder as shall anywise relieve, keep, or harbour, any such aforesaid lewd persons, to the best of your knowledge.

When the mayor, bailiffs, and sergeants are duly sworn, the mayor shall dissolve the court; and he, with all present, consisting of gentlemen and burgesses, shall give due and proper attendance to the elect mayor, to his respective residence, and he in return shall give them a sumptuous banquet or noble treat, and afterwards another banquet, or grand entertainment, shall be given to the various ladies of the town, and wives of all the capital burgesses, in the same manner. There shall be prepared against the feast day of St. Wilfrid, the archbishop, entire new gowns, and other decent attire, as becometh the ancient costume of the borough, and livery cloaks for the sergeants; one at the bailiffs' charge, and the other at the new elect's charge.

And when the aforesaid day is come, viz. St. Wilfrid's day, all the capital burgesses, with the gentlemen of the town, and others who are specially invited upon this occasion, with the four bailiffs and sergeants shall attend the mayor, and new elect, to the parish church, in due procession, preceded by all the regalia, in due and proper form; at which time, and on the Sunday following, the former mayor, and the new elected mayor, shall sit together, upon an elevated throne, belonging to the supreme magistracy of this ancient and loyal borough; where divine service shall be performed, and an inauguration sermon shall be preached upon this occasion; after which the former mayor leads down the aisle of the church, and when arrived at the transept makes a sudden stop, and instantly turning round to the mayor elect, makes a speech applicable to the situation he is about to hold ; afterwards he invests him, by delivering the ensigns of magisterial authority, viz. the staff and maces, and then retires into the regular situation assigned for him in the procession. The bailiffs and sergeants, in like manner deliver up their authority to those appointed to succeed them in office. On this ceremony ending, the bells of the church ring a merry peal, welcoming in the joyful solemnity, of inaugurating a new magistrate for the succeeding year. They all give attendance to the new mayor, at his residence, where he entertains them nobly, with a splendid feast, composed of all kinds of dainties, such as wine, sack, and ale, in abundance. During the course of the evening, he entertains the ladies of the town with a sumptuous supper. Let it be remembered that the mayor elect, previous to setting out in full procession to the parish church, that the keys of the Moot-hall and prison, the massive guild book, maces, mayor's staves, halberds, the book of orders, and other books, records, &c. the standard measures, and every other thing belonging to the corporate body is presented to him by indenture.

The oath of the standers for tollage, is couched in the following words :—

“ You shall well and truly collect, and gather, within this town, all the tolls, duties, and customs, as of right are due to the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of this town, for all such goods as you shall know, or by strict enquiry shall find, to be bought, sold, or exchanged within this town, and thereof make a just and true account, and undelayed payment thereof, to the mayor of this town, of all such monies, as you shall have duly received, according to ancient usage and known custom of this town.

The oath administered to those denominated “ Searchers for cloth or ulnage,” is as follows, viz.—

“ You shall diligently see, and make due search after all such cloth, and cloths, that shall be dyed, dressed, or pressed, with a cold press, within this borough, its franchises and liberties thereof, and see whether the same be well and sufficiently dressed, pressed, and dyed, without putting thereto any deceitful thing, or mixing the same with bad colours, or whether the same be starched or strained, or any ways unlawfully made, contrary to the statutes in that case made and provided : and such cloths, so rightly and duly made or manufactured, pressed, and dyed, shall be sealed with a seal, given into your hands, for this purpose, taking only such just and due fees, as are appointed by the statute in that case, and upon default, in making, dying, pressing, or sealing such inefficient cloth, unsealed, you immediately seize the said cloths, and present the name or names, of such person or persons, who shall offend therein : all these points, you, and either of you, shall well and truly observe and keep, according to your cunning wit and powers.

The freeman's oath is thus :—

“ You shall swear that you shall be good and true to our Sovereign Lord King George the Fourth, and to his heirs and lawful successors, and you shall be obedient to the just and good government of this ancient borough of Preston ; and, to the best of your power, you shall maintain and preserve the peace, and all your due franchises thereof, and according to your knowledge and ability, do and perform all other acts and things as do appertain to a freeman of this town to do.

The seneschal, steward, or town clerk's oath is as follows :—

“ You are elected and chosen to the office of steward, or town clerk of this borough and town of Preston, and also clerk of the statutes, within the same; you shall therefore, by yourself, or your sufficient deputy, well and truly, execute your said office, during such time as you shall so continue in the same, according to the liberties and customs of this town, and also shall do and perform, execute and accomplish, all things belonging to the said office and either of them, according to your knowledge and judgment, for the public weal and benefit of this town, receiving your due fees and profits therefrom.

The following particulars were kindly communicated by a gentleman, resident at Preston, to the publisher :—

In the year 1793, an act of parliament was obtained for making a navigable canal from Kendal in Westmorland, to Westhoughton in Lancashire. This is called the Lancaster canal, and touches in its course the towns of Lancaster, Preston, Chorley, and Wigan, forming a junction with the duke of Bridgewater's canal, and also with that from Leeds to Liverpool. The Lancaster canal is now completed, except for about four miles to the south of Preston, where the north and south branches are connected by an iron rail way, upon which coals and lime stone are conveyed in waggons, which are hoisted up an inclined plane, on the north bank of the Ribble, by means of a steam engine. The loss and expense attending this inconvenient break in the navigation not only prevents the carriage of general merchandize, but occasions the town of Preston to be supplied with coals, in a great measure, by carts directly from the pits. If the line of water carriage were complete, the tonnage upon this canal would be more than doubled, and the whole of this populous and increasing district might thus be supplied with goods of every description, which are now principally carried by land. This short obstacle of four miles once removed, boats might be loaded at the London Docks, at Paddington, Birmingham, Hull, Leeds, Liverpool, or Manchester, and conveyed by water, without being unloaded, to Preston, Lancaster, and Kendal. The finances of the canal company have not yet been thought equal to so great an undertaking as the building of an aqueduct over the Ribble; but it is hoped that the increasing profits of the concern, even under its present disadvantages, will soon enable the proprietors to fulfil their original engagements with the public.

In the general account of this town it may be thought proper to mention that, by the combined exertions of the trustees of the different roads with the commissioners of police within the borough, the main approaches to Preston have within the last few years been greatly improved; the entrance from Liverpool, by Fishergate in particular, may be said to equal that of most provincial towns. The plan of flagging the parapets has also been lately introduced, and a considerable part of Church street and Fishergate already enjoys the benefit of this convenience, but owing to an economising spirit among the commissioners, the improvements in this respect are at present discontinued: in the year 1821, the parish of Preston contained 27,362 inhabitants, and 4,723 houses.

This town, from its situation, has been an important post in the civil commotions of this kingdom, and the scene of various military actions; the following account of the one that happened in 1642, is printed from the original in the British Museum, and is thought worthy of insertion.

The true relation of the taking of the town of Preston by Colonell Seaton's forces from Manchester, sent in a letter from a worthy minister (an eye witness thereof) to an eminent divine in London.

WORTHY SIR,

Be pleased to accept this poar rude paper, it is a messenger sent to tell you good tidings. We have assaulted and taken Preston, a town very considerable, and which much tends to the advancement of the publike worke in this county, and so not altogether impertinent to the kingdome. We were about 900 or 1000 firemen, horse and foot, and about 600 bill-men, halberdiers and clubmen; our march in the night was tedious, especially to many who had marched the night before, and to accomodate us in that, God gave us a faire night, such as had not beene of a space before, yea, and indeed the day forerunning threatned us a very foule night—this was of God. Our men assaulted it a little before sun rising, in an houres time they were masters of it; it was well fortified with brick walls, outer and inner; our men (but especially three companies that came from Manchester) fell on with notable resolution. Captain John Booth scaled their walls, bidding his souldiers either follow him or give him up; but they, forgetting their owne safety, followed him. The garrison fought it out stoutly, they kept their inner works with push of pike, and also the breach they kept with their swords, which aggravates the matter. We have not lost above three or four men, (very strange) falling upon them in their workes; of theirs I saw lying dead in one street end at least five or six, besides other parts of the towne severall, and many in the houses not calling for quarter. And as if men must have been singled out for slaughter, wee could have scarcely have picked out better; the major (that was resolute to desperatenesse in the cause, that had oftentimes been heard sweare he would fire the towne ere he gave it up, and begin with his owne house,) was slain, and that very day he had appointed to constrain the well-affected, or to have seized on their estates; Sir Gilbert Houghton's brother, a captain, and a desperate papist; Mr. Westby, a physitian, and a desperate, a serjeant to the freehold, that came lately out of Ireland, a most wicked wretch, were of the number of the slain. Several of our men are shot, but not mortally (its notable); many are shot in two or three, or four severall places, and neither to death nor dangerously; we have taken some prisoners of note. Captain Farrington, Sir John Talbot's sonne, one Fleetwood, and they say Anderton of Clayton, if so, I assure you, he is one of the most considerable men for estate and activity in the county, and many others, with many arms and a large part of things justly, and by plunder (alas, that that is so much lamented, but most hard to be prevented) seized on, more prisoners of note, we had been possessed of, but that honest flight rescued them. The fruit of this design is not yet perceived, but will shine forth more and more I am confident; it blocks up the way, that all the north-vast part of Lancashire, where were the chief malignants, and the cream of the earl's forces, yea, and indeed, they will come in (I am perswaded and partly perceive already) and subscribe to the propositions. So soon as matters were settled, we sung praises to God in the streets, (sir, it was wonderful to see it) the sun brake forth and shined brightly and hot, in the time of the exercise, as if it had been midsummer. Truely, sir, we owe (subordinate to God) a great deal to Sir John Seaton ; things are artificially and methodically done, past what they were before ; he is a man of wonderful care and unwearied industry, onely rather too harsh for our northern, knotty rigged dispositions, had he the meek spirit, and smooth tongue of S. M. Sparrow, he were peerlesse, and without parallell, doubtlesse. Sir, I am in haste, just come from Preston, and the poste about to take horse, pardon my rudnesse, and brevity, onely, I beseech you assist us in praises, that we may not loose God for want of praises, and pray for us, that plunder cry not louder for justice than prayer for mercy, remember my love and service to your wife. Farewill is the wish of your humble servant and respective friend,

JOHN TILSLEY.

Preston, February 11, 1642.

Postscript.—Anderton of Clayton is out of question taken, Captain Preston taken also, he, with Captain Farrington came this night to Preston, the Serjeant mentioned before, was an Irish rebell, and Fleetwood, before named, was he that killed the man in Manchester, at that time the earl came thither a little before the late siege.

But the most considerable of these was in 1648, when the Duke of Hamilton and Sir Marmaduke Langdale, with a combined army of English and Scotch of the royal party, were defeated with great slaughter by a much inferior number under Cromwell and Lambert; the battle was fought on Ribbleson Moor, to the eastward of the town, and also at the pass of the bridge, the Scotch were pursued by Lambert quite to Wigan.

In the year 1715, a rebellion breaking out in Scotland in favour of the Pretender, a party of Scots marched into England; and being joined by several disaffected people, especially papists, came to Preston in the month of November, (they were commanded by General Forster, and took the town and defended it for some time against the king's troops, by means of haricadoes,) where they were met and beaten by the king's forces under the command of the Generals Willes and Carpenter. Many of them being taken prisoners, were tried, found guilty of high treason, and executed in January and February following, viz. Richard Chorley of Chorley, Esq., Mr. Shuttleworth of Preston, Mr. Roger Moncaster, an attorney at Garstang, Mr. John Ord of Lancaster, Mr. Thomas Cowp of Walton-in-the-Dale, all neighbouring gentlemen, and seven or eight others at Preston; five at Wigan; five at Manchester, of which Thomas Siddall, a blacksmith and captain of the mob, was one, and his head was set up on the cross there; four at Lancaster; four at Garstang, and four at Liverpool, one of which was Mr. Collingwood, who had an estate of 2000*l.* per annum. Also, in 1745, another rebellion broke out in favour of the same Pretender, when the Scots again entered England by Carlisle, which they took, and marching to Derby, they retreated from hence before the Duke of Cumberland, who re-took Carlisle, after a few days seige, on 30th December, 1745, and totally defeated them at Culloden, 16th April, 1746.

P.S. For this nine of the Manchester men taken at Carlisle were executed at Kennington Common, near London, 30th July, 1746, and the heads of Mr. Francis Townley, a younger brother of the Townley family, and Mr. Fletcher, were fixed upon Temple Bar, and those of Mr. Thomas Deacon, son of a physician at Manchester, and Thomas Syddal a barber there, son of the above Thomas Syddal, blacksmith, on the top of the Exchange at Manchester, 18th September, 1746.

On Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock, a quartermaster of the rebels came to Preston; at twelve, Lord Elcho entered the town, at the head of 140 horse, who, after being drawn up in the market-place, he ordered down to Walton Hall; and in the evening the Pretender came with about 1500 or 2000 foot. I got about thirty miles on my journey that night to General Wentworth; and after riding seventy-eight miles the next day, met with him at ten o'clock at night at Ferry Hill near Durham, where all the foot were encamped: they are this night encamped four miles from Darlington, and design to proceed directly to Lancashire, unless the rebels move the Yorkshire road.

Preston, December 15, Sunday Noon.

The bread ordered from Liverpool is now ordered to return back, two battalions of foot guards marching to this place from Wigan are ordered to return, a regiment of dragoons are marched this morning Wigan road, the reason of the orders given are a secret at present, a report prevails that Marshal Wade has stopped them at Lancaster, but I can't give it you with certainty, some few prisoners were brought in last night, and more they say coming; a report was likewise spread here that the rebels had secured shipping at Lancaster, to carry off the principal officers, upon which we told some of the officers that their retreat that way we apprehended might easily be prevented, on which we were brought to the duke's quarters, and a report made to his highness. Sir Everard Fawkenor came soon to let us know his royal highness apprehended no danger of that kind, I shall have an opportunity to write again before I leave this town, if any thing material you may expect to hear from me,

I am, &c.

P. S. No officer of note taken, one Mr. Kenzie a captain is the only one of any account, Lord Elcho is among the rebels not taken.

Preston, December 16.

This morning we have orders from Sir Everard Fawkeners to send the bread forwards that was ordered back yesterday, and the forces that are here were yesterday ordered to march directly for London, but an express arrived at four this morning, which has ordered the forces to march to the northward, and are now marching out of town: the reason rumoured here is, that some of our admirals have fallen in with the French fleet, which were designed to land forces in the south and destroyed them; the rebels are at Kendal, and we expect daily to hear of Wade's being before them, the rear of the rebels marched out of Lancaster yesterday morning eight o'clock.*

* It is well known at Long Preston, near Settle in Yorkshire, that in the year 1745 a buxom, handsome young woman of that place, anxious to see the Pretender and his army, went to Preston in Lancashire for that purpose, a distance of about

REPRESENTATIVE HISTORY.

This borough sent members to parliament in the 23rd, 26th, 33rd, and 35th of Edward I., and in the first of Edward II.; omitted sending till Edward VI.'s time, when it was restored.

PETITIONS, &c. March 25, 1698. A petition of Thomas Patton, esq., against the return of the Right Hon. Lord Willoughby, by means of undue practices.

Oct. 16. A petition from the same in substance with the former.

— 17. A petition of the mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, common council, and capital burgesses, of this borough, shewing that the Right Hon. Lord Willoughby was duly elected and returned, but is since called up to the House of thirty-eight miles, and after gratifying her curiosity, and staying some time in or near the rebel camp, returned to her native village. This became so much the subject of general conversation, that it was the occasion of producing a ballad, which obtained as much notoriety in Ribblesdale as the famous historical ballad of Chevy Chase. The gentleman who has furnished this anecdote says, that he has frequently heard her sing the very song, of which she herself was the subject, twenty-five years after the occurrence, and she had then, though advanced in life, the remains of a handsome face and fine person, which had doubtless been impaired by time and a strong propensity to indulge in spirituous liquors. The strains of

" Long Preston Peggy to Proud Preston went,
To see the bold rebels it was her intent."

was seldom carolled from her lips till she had been treated with half a dozen or more glasses of spirits.

Lords, whereby the borough is now represented by one member only.

Nov. 20. Resolved: "That Robert, Lord Willoughby was duly elected a burghess to serve in Parliament for this borough.

Dec. 7, 1695. A petition of Sir Christopher Greenfield, knt., against the return of Thomas Molineux, esq., by means of corrupt practices.

No determination.

Jan. 16, 1706. A petition of Henry Fleetwood, esq., against the return of Arthur Mainwaring, esq., by means of many corrupt and illegal practices.

Feb. 15. Petition withdrawn.

Dec. 5, 1710. A petition of Francis Annesley, esq., against the return of Sir Henry Houghton, by means of bribery, treats, promises, imprisonment of the voters, and other undue practices.

Dec. 8, 1711. Another petition of Francis Annesley, esq., to the same effect.

Jan. 21, 1712. Petitions withdrawn.

Oct. 25, 1722. A petition of Thomas Molineux, esq., against the return of Thomas Hesketh, esq., by means of bribery and other undue practices.

Jan. 10, 1723. Another petition of the same to the same effect.

At the general election in 1768, Sir Henry Houghton and General Burgoyne opposed Sir Peter Leicester and Sir Frank Standish, who succeeded in getting the return. The former petitioned on the right of the inhabitants at large. The committee found the petitioners duly elected, and ought to have been returned, and Sir Peter Leicester and Sir F. Standish, barts., not duly elected—Nov. 29, 1768.

At the general election in 1774, Sir Henry Houghton, bart., and John Burgoyne, esq., were returned without any contest upon this right of election: but the dispute was renewed at the election following, in 1780, when John Fenton, esq., who stood upon the interest of the in-burgesses inhabitants petitioned against the return of John Burgoyne, esq., but the committee found the sitting member duly elected—April 10, 1781.

In 1784, Ralph Clayton, and Michael Angelo Taylor, esqrs., petitioned against the return of the Right Hon. John Burgoyne and Sir Henry Houghton, bart.

The petition of the candidates alleged, that they were duly elected by a majority of persons qualified to vote by the constitution of the borough; but that the mayor and bailiffs had arbitrarily admitted a great number of persons to vote for the sitting members who had no right to vote, under colour whereof a pretended majority was obtained for them.

A petition of the electors, being in-burgesses inhabitants within the borough, contained the same allegation, and added, that by the constitution of the borough no person had any right of voting upon the election of its burgesses to parliament but in-burgesses of the said borough, inhabiting within the same; and that the return was made in violation of the rights of the petitioners and others the legal electors.

On the 22nd of April, 1785, the chairman of the committee appointed to try the merits of this contested election reported to the house that they found the sitting members duly elected.

RIGHT OF ELECTION.

December 18, 1661. All the inhabitants have voices in the election.

November 29, 1768. Not to admit counsel to produce evidence, in order to shew that the right of election for the said borough was in all the inhabitants, according to the last determination of the house, or that the words, "all the inhabitants," mentioned in the said determination of the house, mean only, "such in-burgesses of the last guild, or those admitted since by copy of court-roll, as are inhabitants of the place," but all the inhabitants at large.

It was determined that the words all the inhabitants did not only mean the in-burgesses of the last guild, or those admitted since by copy of court-roll, as are inhabitants of the said place, but all the inhabitants at large—29th November 1770.

NUMBER OF VOTERS—2,200.

RETURNING OFFICERS—the mayor and bailiffs.

PATRONS—the earl of Derby and Mr. Horrocks.

POLITICAL CHARACTER.

This borough had always been under the influence of the earls of Derby till the year 1802, when, by the increase of manufacture and population, occasioned by the introduction of the cotton-mills into this town by the late John Horrocks, esq., who, in the short space of twenty years, had risen from obscurity to great opulence, he succeeded to a share in the political influence.

He opposed the interest of the earl of Derby in 1796, and was supported by the late earl of Liverpool, then chancellor of the Duchy Court of Lancaster; and by the whole weight of the Church and King Club at Manchester, a party better known in 1745 by the name of the Manchester Jacobites, but was at that time unsuccessful, the numbers on the poll being—

For Lord Stanley - . - - 772

Sir H. P. Houghton - - - 756

John Horrocks, esq. - - - 742

The numbers being so nearly equal, and the interest of Mr. Horrocks increasing, the parties formed a coalition at the next election, in 1802, and agreed each to return one member.

These united interests were opposed in 1807 by the late Edward Hanson, esq., of Manchester, with every prospect of success; and again in 1812, when they had gathered such strength as to leave Mr. Hanson in a great minority, the numbers on the poll being—

For Samuel Horrocks, esq. - - - 1,371

Edmund Hornby, esq. - - - 1,368

Edward Hanson, esq. - - - 727

Many attempts have been made to limit the right of election in this town by petition, and to obtain the determination of a committee, that “all the inhabitants,” meant only a select number, as was the case in the Truro question, when the word “populace” was determined to mean a corporation of twenty-five persons; and in all the cases respecting Poole, that the word "commonalty" meant the corporation only. In the Preston case, however, it is due to the cause of justice to remark, that the words "all the inhabitants" having a right to vote, means all the inhabitants at large of the said town.

The gilda mercatoria, or merchant's guild, is a liberty or privilege granted to merchants, whereby they are enabled to hold certain pleas of land, &c. within their own precincts, and is confirmed by charters given in the 37th Edward III. and 15th Richard II. It is of Saxon origin, and is derived from the word gile, signifying money, by which certain fraternities enter into an association, and stipulate with each other, to punish crimes, make losses good, and acts of restitution, in proportion to offences; for which aforesaid purposes they raised sums of money amongst themselves, and put the same into one common stock; they likewise endowed chantries, for priests to perform oraisons for the defunct. Fraternities and guilds were therefore in use, in this kingdom, long before any formal licences were granted to them, though at this day they are a company combined together with orders, and laws, made by themselves, by the king's licence. Guilds were held by the Saxons, as may be seen from their records, which runs thus:—" In Quibus Gilhala Burgensium," &c. The guild of Coventry will shew how all the rest were held, and were used before any regular licence or charters were granted. The guild is generally a gay and festive meeting; oratorios, balls, masquerades, and plays, continue for many weeks. St. John the Baptist is the special patron of Preston guild.

It is a sort of public Carnival or Jubilee.—It begins about the latter end of August, and by the charter which obliges the corporation to celebrate it at the end of every twenty years, on pain of forfeiting their elective franchises and their rights as burgesses. By public proclamation it is declared, that in failure of doing so, they are ever after to be debarred of the same on any future occasion.

This guild was instituted in the days of Henry the 2nd, who was Duke of Normandy, A. D. 1172, and the late one, in 1802, makes the eighteenth, which has been held under the reign of twelve monarchs. His late Majesty, George the 3rd, is the only sovereign during whose reign three of these festivals have been celebrated.

The method of holding a Guild.

The town crier proclaims twenty-eight days' grace, for all burgessess to renew their freedom, whether acquired by ancestry or purchase. The sports and revelry which are inseparable companions of the guild, and the processions of the various trades and occupations of the inhabitants, draw together, on this occasion, immense multitudes of people, from various parts of the united kingdom; and Preston thereby becomes the resort of all that is brilliant and fashionable.

At the grand court of election, holden at the Moot or Guild-hall, within the borough, previous to the guild commencing, the greatest care is taken that the capital burgesses be men of good manners, education, and ability, in order that they may reflect credit, during this festival, upon the whole body corporate, and the town to which they have the honour to belong, as they have specially to attend the guild mayor, in all the public assemblies during this carnival, where the nobility, and other men of high birth, together with ladies of distinction, assembled here from various parts of the kingdom, are to be treated with becoming courtesy, by the mayor and his retinue, upon this occasion, in every way becoming their rank and dignity, so that it may redound to the honour and dignity of the guild merchants of the borough of Preston.

The grand seneschal, or town clerk, reads over, at the Easter court, held previous to the guild, the names of all foreign burgesses who live out of the county of Lancaster, in order that circular letters may be sent, either to themselves, or those nearest related to them, that they may attend either by proxy or otherwise, at the ensuing guild to be held in such a month, and on such a day, which generally happens in August, unless something extraordinary happens to obstruct the same. Three stewards are generally chosen for the guild, out of the body of aldermen, who have authority, by virtue of their office, to receive all fines from those who claim privilege in the franchises of the borough, and also the grand seneschal, or town clerk to the guild, who administers the oath to all burgesses, recording their names in a book kept for that purpose. Twelve principal burgesses are elected out of the council, to be aldermen of the guild; their office is to sit on each side of the guild mayor, at all his public exhibitions. The mayor with the residue of his council, shall choose out of the burgesses proper persons to be procurators, for the special purpose of providing all things necessary for the guild, such as venison, beef, veal, mutton, &c. &c. together with ale, wine, sack, and other liquors, to be safely lodged in vaults contiguous to the Guild-hall, previous to the commencement of the guild.

All burgesses to have a month's notice previous to the solemnization of the guild.

The Guild Mayor, with the rest of his brethren, the resident gentry, and other inhabitant burgesses, attending in due form, and appropriate costume, shall make proclamation upon the market-day (Saturday) at the obelisk, in the market-place, the mayor's sergeant speaking aloud the following proclamation :—

The Proclamation for the Guild.—"I, G. R. gentleman, now the worshipful the mayor of Preston, in Amounderness, in the county palatine of Lancaster, give notice, admonition, and due warning to all and every the free-burgesses, as well inhabitants as foreigners, that they, and every of them, do repair by themselves, or their friends as proxies, to the town of Preston, on Monday the 3rd of September next, coming forth, being the Monday next after the feast of the decollation of St. John the Baptist, at which feast heretofore a guild merchant within this borough, hath usually, for divers ages last past, been solemnly kept every twenty years. And now likewise, upon the day aforementioned, in this present year, a new guild merchant, within this borough of Preston aforesaid, is appointed to be holden and kept, according to the tenor of divers charters and grants, heretofore given; granted, and confirmed, by the king's most excellent majesty, and his royal progenitors, kings and queens of England, to the mayors, bailiff, and burgesses of this borough. For the solemnizing of which guild merchant, here to be holden as aforesaid, the said G. R. now mayor of this borough, doth give further notice and warning, that all free-burgesses inhabiting this borough of Preston aforesaid, be ready, upon the 3rd day of September aforesaid next, being the first day of the ensuing guild merchant, by eight o'clock in the morning, at the Guild-hall, from thence to attend upon the guild mayor, stewards, and aldermen of the said guild merchant, in their distinct companies of trade, with their masters or wardens, well ordered and disposed for that purpose, and all those that cannot well be reduced into such companies or fraternities, there to attend in such order as shall at that time be assigned them; and from the Guild-hall, to attend the worshipful the guild mayor, in solemn procession, to the parish church of Preston, from whence, after divine service, and sermon preached upon that occasion, by the guild mayor's chaplain, they do likewise attend upon the worshipful the guild mayor, in public procession from street to street, and thence return to the Guild-hall, from whence they first set out. And moreover the aforesaid G. R. the mayor of this borough, giveth notice and warning, that all and every burgess, and burgesses, as well foreigners, as inhabitants within this borough, claiming any franchises either by ancestry or by purchase, within this borough of Preston, after their repairing to the borough at the day and time aforesaid, that there and then they not only claim and entitle themselves to all such liberties, privileges, and freedoms, as to them, or any of them, not only shall be due, or in anyways belong; but also there and then, they also do and perform, whatsoever to them, and every of them, of right doth appertain to do, according to the ancient, laudable, and rightful customs of this borough, as to the rights and privileges anyways appertain to this guild merchants' festival: and also, then and there to be acquainted with what orders, acts, or statutes, as by the mayor, stewards, and aldermen of this present guild shall and may be thought fit, either to be added, altered, abrogated, or confirmed, not being repugnant to the known laws of this realm, for the good and public weal of this borough of Preston, according to the tenor of the letters patent of our Sovereign Lord Charles the 2nd, and other his royal progenitors, kings and queens of this kingdom, and according to the laudable custom and

“ God save the King.”

A fortnight before the guild, the mayor, stewards, and aldermen of the guild, in council assembled, shall elect all other officers as are necessary for the said occasion, and as by former precedents are set forth, to attend upon his worship the guild mayor, and the nobility and gentry who have come from afar to be spectators of this grand jubilee. Their various duties shall be severally pointed out and explained to them. The three stewards of the guild, with three of the senior aldermen, are appointed during the festival, to sit in open court, with the clerk of the peace of the guild, and receive from each burgess of that fraternity 7d. “ pro feodis sino,” (on account of which sum I, meaning the burgess, renew my feod or fee). And the like sum for each male child of any of the aforesaid burgesses, and some minor reward to the sergeant of the guild, “ ad Testificandam seipsos esse Burgenses,” that is to bear witness that they were made burgesses, according to the ancient rule made use of by the Roman pretors, their yeomen of the guards, or sergeants of the guild, used to receive from people to be free in their municipia. The following words occur in the original records of this borough :—" If any be mindful to be made a burgess let him come into the court, and render to the pretor twelve pence, and take his burgage from the pretors, and render to the pretors' servant one penny, and he shall bear witness that he was made a burgess in this court." When these fees are paid, then shall he or his children's name be enrolled by the grand seneschal, or town clerk, in order to perpetuate the same from guild to guild. Then shall the following oath be administered to them, in open court, if they are of age, and have complied by paying their fees :—

The oath of a free burgess, being a nobleman, knight, or gentleman, not residing within the borough of Preston, to be administered by the steward of the Guild.

" You shall swear, that you will be good and true to our Sovereign Lord King George the Fourth, and to the heirs of his body and other lawful successors of our said Lord the King. The guild merchant now holden, and which in time to come shall be holden if you live so long, you shall maintain and uphold. You shall warn your mayor, or his officers, if any conspiracy or secret conventicle shall exist in this town, against the peace of our Lord the King. All these points and articles you shall well and truly keep, according to the laws and customs of the realm and of this town to your power. So help you God, and by the contents of this book."

The oath of a free burgess, not inhabiting within the borough.

"You shall swear, that you shall be good and true to our Sovereign Lord King George the Fourth, and to the heirs of his body, and other lawful successors of our said Lord the King. The guild merchant now holden, and which in time to come shall be holden, if you live so long, you shall maintain and uphold. Obeisant and obedient you shall be to the mayor of this town, concerning the franchises and customs thereof, and the same you shall maintain to your best endeavours, and this town keep harmless inasmuch as in you lies. You shall know of no gatherings, conventicles, or conspiracies, made within the town of Preston, against the king's peace, but you shall warn the mayor or his burgesses, or some other officers thereof, and let the same be known according to the best of your power. All these points and articles you shall well and truly keep, according to the laws and customs of these realms, and of this town, to your power. So help you God, and by the contents of this book."

and let it out to the best of your power. All these points and articles you shall well and truly keep, according to the laws of the realm, and of this town, to your power. So help you God, and by the contents of this book."

On the Monday after the decollation of St. John the Baptist, at eight o'clock in the morning, all the different fraternities of the various trades in the borough, with their respective wardens, in their gowns, and having long white staves, each company walking two abreast, with their flags unfurled, and bands of music preceding them, march regularly to the Moot-hall, and place themselves according to previous orders given, and wait for the guild mayor and his company. The young gentlemen of the town and others, who as yet are not free to the franchises of the town, have a captain of their own, walking two abreast preceded by the town's flag, having the arms of the town emblazoned thereon, together with music and drums; after which the great banner, containing the royal arms of England painted thereon, followed by the mayor's pensioners or guard, with other partizans, and the halberdmen, the sergeant with his halberd, the two sergeants with their maces, and the large mace, carried by some person of respectability appertaining to their body, the two bailiffs, with their white wands, and the aldermen, in their robes, and after them the guild mayor, with his staff of authority, attended on each side, and after him in pairs, by the nobility and gentry belonging the town and neighbourhood.

The Procession.

The mayor proceeds from his residence, attended by ladies and gentlemen, to the Moot or Guild-hall, and from thence walks in due procession, attended by twelve aldermen and the common-councilmen, together with the rest of the corporation officers, all attired in their robes of office, to the ancient cross or obelisk, in the Market-place, where proclamation is made, saying "That our ancient guild merchant is now opened according to the charter given us, of which we shall duly observe every ordinance therein contained, according to the obvious meaning thereof," concluding with "God save our gracious Sovereign." The guild merchant being duly opened and solemnized, the bells of the Parish church begin to ring a merry peal, assisted by the sounds of trumpets and other martial music. All the soldiers and guards, together with the various companies, are placed by his guards and other attendants, together with the various companies aforementioned. They proceed from thence to Church-gate toll-bars, where the mayor and all his retinue are entertained with a speech made by a chief scholar belonging to the Free Grammar school, who is selected for the occasion. A barrel of good ale is generally given to the multitude, and the mayor, together with those who immediately attend him, drink a health to the king and queen, the prosperity of the borough, and the health of the ladies and gentlemen, together with the various companies assembled upon this grand occasion. This is generally given with great eclat from the surrounding multitude assembled upon the occasion, together with a volley of fire, from the soldiery who attend upon this occasion. The procession then turns round and march in due order towards the Fishergate-bars, there they are entertained with a similar speech given in the Latin language, when another hogshead of ale is brought forth, with the aforesaid ceremonies. Then they proceed forthwith to the Friar-gate toll-bars, where they are entertained in the same manner. They walk from thence to the high cross, situate in the Market-place, where the head master of the Free Grammar school maketh a learned speech, appertaining to the prosperity of the town, its immunities, franchises, and liberties that are enjoyed within this truly ancient and loyal borough, and more pertinently with respect to the ancient guild merchant, held every twentieth year. Upon this occasion a hogshead of most excellent wine is opened, and given respectively by serving-men, to the mayor, his retinue, and the various companies assembled upon this great and grand jubilee. The trumpets sounding, bands of music playing, and the joyful acclamations of the people mixed wherewithal, render this a time of joy and festivity. When this is finished, they march in due order towards the Guild-hall; and when the mayor and his retinue have entered the same, the flags, consisting of the royal arms of Great Britain, and the armour of the town, emblazoned thereon, are hung out of the windows of the Moot-hall, accompanied by the acclamations of the companies, and others assembled upon this occasion. The various companies repair to their respective rendezvous, and there enjoy themselves by social order and good-will towards one another. The foreign burgesses who are come upon this occasion, are duly entertained at the expence of the mayor, at some respectable burgess' house, during this great jubilee.

The mayor's staff is mounted at the top with a silver envelope, bearing the following words engraven thereon:—

 “Ex Dono Edwardi Rigby, Armr.” The two silver maces are two feet ten inches in length, and bear the following words engraven on each of them:—“Edward Assheton, mayor, 1722.” The large silver gilt mace measures in length four feet and a half, and is surmounted by a regal crown, elegantly ornamented with curious workmanship, and bears the following inscription engraved round the handle:—“The gift of the High and Mighty Prince James, Duke of Hamilton, Marquess of Clydesdale, Earl of Arran, Lanark, and Cambridge, Lord Avon, Polmont, Macanshire, and Innerdale, and Knight of the Most Ancient and Most Noble order of the Thistle, &c. to the town of Preston, in Lancashire, in the year 1703;
 in token of his friendship to that corporation, and of their civilities to him, and Elizabeth Gerrard Duchess of Hamilton, his consort, testified at several occasions, during their abode in that place, and particularly upon the birth of their son, James, Marquess of Clydesdale, who was born at Preston, the 3rd day of January, 1701.”

The two small maces, together with the large silver gilt one, are of exquisite beauty, and curious workmanship, and consist of the crown of Great Britain surmounting the top of the handles, inside each of them the royal arms of England is exhibited, in a kind of relief. The outside margin of the larger one is intersected with the arms of his Majesty, the figure of a regal crown mounting a cushion, together with those of the star and thistle, emblematical of the honour of knighthood enjoyed by the donor, his grace the Duke of Hamilton.

Lord Strange, father to the present Earl of Derby, gave to the corporate body of this town an elegant silver punch-bowl, ornamented with fretwork on the outside, and bearing the following inscription :—" The gift of the Right Honourable Edward Earl of Derby, 24th August, 1742;" surmounted by the coat armour of his lordship, neatly engraved. On the opposite side occurs, near the margin of the edge of the bowl, the coat armour of the town of Preston, with the following words round the shield :—" Preston in Amounderness, Anno Domini, 1742."

The silver gilt chalice, or flagon, is curiously embossed with excellent workmanship, and has an elegant covering, surmounted by a man attired in the ancient Roman costume, with his hand reclining upon a shield; within this is engraved " Anno Domini, 1615." Upon the opposite side is the ancient seal of the town, with the holy lamb couchant, bearing a flag with the initials P. P.

and these words encircling it:—"Sigillum commune ville de Preston."

There is a fine silver coffee-pot, with the coat armour of the Atherton family engraven thereon, and the following words:—"The gift of Richard Atherton, of Atherton, Esq. to the corporation of Preston, 1722."

The plain silver cup with handles, contains this inscription:—"Ex Dono Radi Longworth, Gent., Rico Hynde, Gent., Majori Burgensium sive ville de Preston, et Successoribus suis in perpetuum. Anno Domini, 1671." Queen Anne's glass is a piece of fine antiquity, and possesses a silver gilt handle, which by means of a screw is separated for the purpose of keeping clean. On one side is exhibited, in neat engraving, the arms of the Fleetwoods, of Penwortham, and the following words underneath:—"Homo Homini Lupus." On the opposite side is engraven the holy lamb passant, and underneath the following inscription:—"Prosperity to the Queen, the Church of England, and the Corporation of Preston." There are two elegant silver snuff boxes, inlaid with gold, bearing the following words engraved within the lids:—"The gift of Mr. Richard Palmer, Town-clerk of Preston, 1814;" the other, "The gift of Mr. John Green, Treasurer of the Corporation of Preston, 1814."

Officers of the Guild.

There are, according to ancient custom, three high stewards duly appointed to superintend this fete, whose peculiar office is to compare the old guild book, in order to ascertain what persons are still living, belonging to each family of burgesses, whether inhabitant restored, or foreign burgesses.

The first Steward compares and duly examines the ancient guild book, as to what is stated above.

The second Steward is to consider what additional burgesses have been admitted to the franchises and liberties of the borough, who are admitted by what is termed court-roll.

The third Steward is termed the bondsman, and receives all fines paid at this time, and if any court-roll burgess, or newly admitted burgess, requires confirmation of his freedom to the borough, this aforesaid steward, with the aldermen who are termed benchers, are to fix upon the exact sum he is to pay for the renewal of his franchise, he is then enrolled accordingly in the large guild book, by the seneschal or town-clerk. Therefore, all burgesses and others admitted de novo, and claiming a right of privilege in these aforesaid cases, are duly admitted upon examination of their claims and rights being fully proved.

There is a Comptroller of the Household, chosen also from the body of the aldermen, whose office is, during the time of the guild being celebrated, to survey the inferior officers of the household. He is attired in a dark gown, with a white rod in his hand, and gives directions and advice to the clerk of the kitchen, the cook, and other servants employed for the purpose of preparing entertainment for feasting, during this solemnization of Preston guild. And moreover he is to see that no extravagance takes place, but that economy and order be observed in all things relative to this business.

The Clerk of the Kitchen is to advise with the comptroller upon all occasions, and to give due orders to the cook and butchers, what sort of beef, mutton, veal, &c. he is to prepare, together with venison, rabbits, hares, and fowls, such as geese, ducks, pheasants, capons, and pullets. The bread-baker, the brewer, and the larderer, all hold their respective spheres during this interesting carnival. There is a chief butler gorgeously attired in blue and red costume, the yeoman of the wine cellar, clerk of the kitchen, &c. &c. The clerk of the kitchen receives all accounts daily, and enters all up in his account book kept for that purpose, and lastly, to deliver up his accounts to the comptroller, who when the guild is closed renders these accounts at the public audit held in the Guild-hall for that purpose.

The Chief Cook gives special orders to the under cooks, how and in what manner they are to prepare victuals, by giving them a bill of fare for each day's entertainment.

The Under Cooks, together with the turnspits, scullery girls, and others, are to be every way obeisant, and obedient in all cases, and to go through their respective occupations with all alacrity and diligence.

The Chief Butler's business is to attend the pantry, and to entertain the strangers with becoming courtesy.

The Under Butlers always to be in waiting, and to be ready to attend the cellars, for drawing liquors for the guests assembled at these entertainments.

The Yeomen of the Wine Cellar is to attend the various ladies and gentlemen with whatever they may want, such as wine, sack, and other liquors provided upon this occasion, and to furnish the dining-room with all necessary appendages, such as the plates, knives and forks, table cloths, tankards, glasses, jugs, goblets, &c. And to receive orders from the comptroller what he is to do, and to be in unison in all cases appertaining to this entertainment, so that no bad example be set to the residue of the servants by any refractory words or actions, tending to disturb the harmony which should prevail at this joyful time.

The Pantler and Bread-baker are to provide and deliver out, upon due orders being given to that effect, such as bread, cheese, butter, &c.

The Guardian of the Sweetmeats and Spicery to have all things in ample order and readiness, so that he may be the better enabled to deliver out to the cook what may be wanting in the kitchen, for furnishing dishes for the various courses of the entertainments given by the guild mayor and his worthy brethren the capital burgesses of the town of Preston.

Those young men denominated Waiters at the Table, are to be men of good manners, comely in their features, and cleanly in their bodily habits; they are to carry the various dishes, and place them in ample order upon the table in the dining-room; and to be ready at all times during dinner, to wait upon either lady or gentleman, with alacrity, in all cases needful.

There are persons appointed, termed Gentlemen Servers, who receive the various dishes from these waiters, as occasion requires, and who duly see that the bill of fare is carried into effect upon these occasions. The tables are to be prepared by the second butler in office, who furnishes napkins, bread and salt, and beer, ale, and wine, in large vessels, which stand on large trays near the side-board.

The Gentlemen of the Nappery, or nut-brown ale, serving-men, give directions to the waiting-men, how and in what manner to serve each gentleman, with bottles of sack and wine, such as claret, rhenish, hock, cogniac, ale, &c. and to keep the various glasses, bowls, tankards, &c. in good order.

The Gentleman Carver is to attend, with his h'wyle and his steel by his side, a man of good judgment in this respect and of courteous manners.

The Grand Marshall of the Procession shall hold his office, by giving directions how and in what manner the various companies shall range themselves, and when the procession is ended to see that the nobility, gentry, and others, take their due precedence at the table, where they dine in a sumptuous manner with the guild mayor at the head of the table, joined by all his retinue.

The Usher of the Guild-hall shall have his due place and precedence assigned him, and shall be habited in a black gown, and a black staff in his hand, and shall stand at the foot of the great staircase leading up to the rooms; all gentlemen of honour and distinction are to be ushered into the room, in due form, by him.

The MARSHAL.

The Groom Porters are dressed in black gowns, and stand on each side of the entrance to the Guild-hall, in order to keep all undue and improper persons from making entrance within the hall.

When the mayor and his retinue are arrived at the Moot-hall, the two flags, consisting of the royal arms of England, and the coat armour of the town, are taken and hung out of the highest window of the Guild-hall. The guild mayor, with his retinue, enters the hall, passing by the groom porter attired in his black gown, and his black staff of office in his hand, who keeps undue and improper persons from making their entrance at this time. They are then conducted into the dining-room, by the comptroller and the usher, each robed, with their staves of office; when they are arrived they give a low obeisance, and so return, performing this alternately to all, welcoming them upon this grand solemnity. Biscuit and wine is generally served before dinner; whilst the dinner is going on, a band of music is kept in full play, for the more nobly entertaining the guests. The carrying of the various meats on the first day of the guild is, according to ancient rule, for the first course, performed by the twelve aldermen, or benchers, who present the dishes to the serving-men, who place them in due order upon the table. After this the guild mayor, with his master of the ceremonies, proceed immediately to usher into the dining-room the various nobility and gentry assembled upon the occasion, and when every one is placed in due precedence, the chaplain of the guild mayor imploreth the blessing of the Almighty upon these gifts so liberally bestowed on them; after which the grand carver attends at table, with all courtesy, in order to supply the guests there assembled. After the different courses are served, and the appetites of the guests perfectly satisfied, healths are enthusiastically drank to the king and royal family of Great Britain, together with many lords and gentlemen, the guild mayor and his retinue, with three times three.

When three o'clock in the afternoon is come, notice is duly given to the wardens belonging to the various companies of trades, with their respective members, to attend again in their equipage, after having dined together at their respective rendezvous. Each company invariably have presents sent to them by the guild mayor and his retinue, such as venison pasty, together with wine and sack, in bottles.

The first entrance of the Mayor into the Guild-hall.

The worshipful the guild mayor, with all his retinue, attired in their respective robes of office, with their staves in their hands, enter the Town-hall, where the sergeant makes proclamation beginning with o'yes, reiterated three distinct times.

The Proclamation.

“Whereas Charles the 2nd, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, by his royal charter, dated the 32nd year of his reign, 1651, did grant, confirm, and continue what his predecessors and progenitors, kings and queens of England, or what himself had formerly given and granted, in the 32nd year of his reign, to the mayors, bailiffs, and burgesses (or any of them, jointly or separately,) of this borough of Preston, in Amounderness, in the county of Lancaster. The borough of Preston was, and now is, a free and ancient borough, and did confirm and ratify all the ancient rights, privileges, immunities, and franchises, that at any time heretofore had been granted and confirmed to the mayor, bailiffs, and capital burgesses, or to the burgesses of the borough or town of Preston aforesaid, by any of his predecessors or progenitors, kings or queens of this realm of England. And whereas King Henry the 2nd, by his noble charter, did constitute this town of Preston to be a free borough ; and his son King John, by his royal charter, did confirm the same ; which King Henry the 3rd, by inspeximus, doth confirm and likewise ratify, in the 11th year of his reign ; and by another charter of King Henry the 3rd, in the 37th year of his reign, did grant to his burgesses of Preston, all the liberties and free customs, which he had given and granted to his burgesses of Newcastle-under-Line. And now the burgesses of the borough of Preston in Amounderness, have had full liberty and freedom to enjoy these privileges, immunities, and franchises aforesaid, and have used and enjoyed the same in a plenary way. They have also kept many guild merchants' jubilees within this borough, every twentieth year, as may and do appear from the records and various guild books that are now extant."*

* A Guild merchant was omitted in the time of Henry 6th, perhaps owing to the various civil wars which took place between the Houses of Lancaster and York ; also in the time of Henry the 8th, when the reformation began in church affairs ; and in King Edward the 3rd's reign, when the Scottish army, under Bruce, King of Scotland, razed Preston to the ground.

There is generally in the afternoon of the first day, great preparation made previous to the evening coming on, for the ladies to honour the guild mayor with their presence, where they are nobly treated, in the great dining-room, with a splendid supper. Where afterwards mellifluous sounds are heard, and the mazy dance is tripped with light fantastic toe, to the great pleasure and admiration of all present. The second day of the Guild.—The guild mayor, attended by his retinue, walks in procession to the Parish church, where his chaplain performs divine service and sermon; afterwards returning in the same order to the Moot-hall, with all the pageantry and ceremony mentioned heretofore, where they dine in their usual style. The first week of the guild is attended with feasting foreign burgesses, being men of good report. Each company of the various trades, hang out of the windows daily, at their respective rendezvous, the flags with their coat armour emblazoned thereon, in vivid colours, during the whole time of this jubilee. When the wardens of any company are to dine publicly at any dinner given upon this occasion within the borough, by any resident gentleman, he is attended to the place in due order, by the flag and a band of music; which has continued in former times for the space of six weeks.

Guild orders agreed upon after the Restoration of Charles the Second, 1660.

“ It was ordered, established, and enacted, by plenary assent, and consent, of the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs, and others appertaining to the corporation of the borough of Preston, of this present guild merchant.—That all the various books containing guild orders, be surveyed, examined, and assorted together, according to each subject contained within them, in their respective order, according to the respective reign of each king of England: And that such things as appertain to the observation of the sabbath-day.—Matter in itself purely pointed, concerning the marsh land, the moor, and common belonging to this borough.—The revenues, rents, toll, &c. &c. as do in anywise belong to this our ancient borough.—Also what may relate to the trade and traffic, together with householding, innkeepers, taverns, and so forth.—Also the method of electing officers, and their several duties.—Also concerning foreign burgesses, and how far they differ in the quality of freedom from those who are inhabitant burgesses.—

That all things be brought forward and debated upon pro and con, and that what is ratified shall be written in a fair and legible hand, on vellum, for the use of posterity.*

Upon each Sunday which occurs during the time of this carnival, immediately after divine service and sermon, dinner is prepared at the Guild-hall; first, for treating the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs, recorder, and others connected with the supreme magistracy of the town; secondly, for the feasting of the trades-people, and others; thirdly, for the working classes; fourthly, for the decayed and infirm freemen of the borough, whom poverty has brought to the lowest ebb, equally participate of the benevolence of the mayor, and the rest of the body.

During the time of the guild being celebrated, the wardens of each company, with their brethren, examine the orders of their respective companies, and if they find, on mature examination, that any alteration is deemed necessary, they advertise, forthwith, the guild mayor and his brethren, that they may consider of the same; and propose to him, and receive his approbation for what may redound to the honour and credit of the borough, so that the same may not anywise militate against the known laws of this realm. All additional regulations to be entirely approved of by the guild mayor and his brethren, and then to be regularly engrossed on parchment, and afterwards perused by the aforesaid authority.

When the conclusion of the guild merchant is come to issue, all the different companies attend, as on the first day of the guild, together with as many burgesses as can make the same convenient, upon the worshipful the guild mayor, to the Moot or Guild-hall. The court is there holden, and the burgesses' attendance is requisite, particularly the masters and wardens belonging to the various companies; who have their orders sealed de novo, and regularly entered into the guild book. Proclamation is then made three times. Each inhabitant burgess is called by his name, by the grand seneschal, or his proxy, the guild book of new orders is held up before them, and afterwards the contents thereof are read to them; then the guild mayor saith, "Brethren, do you approve of these ordinances so done by us, which by your preceding oath (mentioned in this work) of burgesses you have engaged to fulfil; and which are consonant to the regal authority, and the laudable customs of preceding guilds;" after which, all the burgesses with one voice cry, "So be it;" and the mayor concludes with "God save the King." Then the grand seneschal, or town-clerk, affixes upon the book the grand seal of the borough, containing the holy lamb couchant, and afterwards holds up the book, saying, "Here is your law," concluding with "God save the King."

Then the sergeants make proclamation as follows:—
 "This grand guild merchant's court is adjourned for twenty years, until a new guild merchants' court be held and duly proclaimed." They generally conclude with "God save the King," amid the noise of drums, trumpets, and loud acclamations from the surrounding multitude. The worshipful the guild mayor, with his retinue, returns from the Moot-hall, homewards; and each warden, with his respective company, to their rendezvous. The mayor gives a grand banquet, consisting of biscuit, ale, wine, and sack; afterwards they retire to some respectable innholder's within the borough, where the gentlemen and others return him thanks in appropriate speeches, telling him, with great applause from all assembled, that he has had great care, much labour, and particular charge upon his mind, in order to give true eclat to this great, grand, and unparalleled jubilee, holden and happily concluded within this borough; which guild merchant is not regularly held by many boroughs, but has fallen to decay for want of that proper spirit, so essentially necessary to the conservation of this our ancient guild merchant of Preston.

An Account of the Guild that was held Monday, August 30, 1762.

His worship the Mayor repaired to the town-hall, about nine o'clock in the morning, where he was met by the stewards, aldermen, &c. After opening the guild merchant, by disenfranchising the freemen, and recording themselves in the new book, they proceeded to the parish church, in their proper ornaments, habits, &c. with their officers, regalia, and an excellent band of music; they were accompanied by a most brilliant and numerous appearance of nobility and gentry, dressed in the gayest and richest manner, and were attended by the several companies of trade (properly marshalled or disposed) with their ensigns displayed, &c. A good band of music preceding each company. Divine service and a sermon (preached on the occasion by the Rev. Mr. Andrews, vicar of Preston, and chaplain to the mayor) being ended, a grand procession was begun, and continued through the principal streets: nothing could be more sumptuous or striking; the whole was splendid and magnificent, and gave every beholder the greatest joy and satisfaction. Fifty ladies and gentlemen, of superior rank, dined this day, with the mayor and his lady, at the Guild-hall. The entertainment (which was provided under the direction of Mr. Baker, of York) afforded much pleasure. The table was covered with the utmost taste and magnificence, and supplied with all the delicacies, that the most luxurious fancy could invent, the season furnish, or expence procure; and no care or pains were omitted to render every thing as commodious and agreeable as possible.

The mayor's table was, during the Guild, adorned with a great variety of emblematical ornaments; and no expence was spared that might serve to improve its splendour, elegance, and accommodations: every person was supplied with plenty, and dispatch, and yet the several services were performed without hurry and confusion. At this table the mayor and his lady entertained fifty ladies and gentleman every day, except at the races, (which continued four days) when the mayor favoured the gentlemen with his company at the ordinaries; and forty ladies, besides the chaplain, dined each day with Mrs. Mayoress at the Guild-hall.

Tuesday, August 31.

About ten o'clock in the morning, Mrs. Mayoress was waited upon, in the grand rooms of the town and

Guild-halls, by about 300 ladies, all splendidly and elegantly dressed. From thence they walked, in public procession (two and two) to the church. Divine service being concluded, (no sermon was preached this day) they returned, in the same order as before, round the market-place to the state rooms, preceded by the mayor's officers, town's regalia, &c. During the procession, the different companies of trade were drawn up in lines on each side, (many gentlemen also attending) to prevent the ladies from being interrupted or incommoded by the numerous crowd of spectators, who were assembled to view this uncommon and memorable sight. There was, on this occasion, an amazing concourse of people from many parts of the kingdom, and from all parts of the county. This sight was allowed to surpass any thing of the kind ever seen in the country, and exceeded the expectation of every one present, as well in point of the brilliancy and grandeur that attended it, as in respect of the regularity and decorum with which it was conducted.

Wednesday, September 1.

The several fraternities of trade, marshalled as before, paraded the capital streets of the town, with their respective colours flying, kettle drums, French horns, trumpets, &c. This sight could not fail of giving great pleasure to the spectators. The whole was conducted, as on the preceding day, with great order and regularity.

Two grand balls (to which every person who went properly dressed was admitted) were given every week during the jubilee, by the mayor, viz. Monday and Friday, when an elegant cold collation (with a rich desert of sweetmeats, and the choicest wines of all sorts) were provided in an adjoining room, and in another chocolate-tea, &c. &c.

The ladies assembly was opened twice a week, viz. on Tuesday and Thursday, and the trade assembly was opened in the same rooms every Wednesday.

A commodious temporary theatre was built (for the purpose) in the Church-street, in which were performed plays, &c. by his Majesty's comedians from the theatres royal in London, viz. Mr. Yates (Manager), Messrs. Holland, King, Lee, &c. Mrs. Yates, Mrs. Ward, &c. Dancers, Signior Maranesi, Miss Baker, Master Rogie, Miss Capitani, &c. Performers at the public breakfasts and concertos, Miss Brent, Signior Tenducci, Dr. Arne, Mr. Arne, jun. Mr. Desaubrys, Signiors Dasti, Blanck, Richter, Mr. Richardson, Master Bromley (on the harp), Mr. Lambourne (on the musical glasses), &c. Mr. Johnson, by his dexterity in horsemanship, gave great satisfaction.

And that no rank of persons might be deprived of amusements agreeable to them, at this solemnity, there were exhibited in the old theatre, in the Fishergate, under the direction of the said Mr. Yates, from Drury-lane, various performances on the slack wire, by a celebrated equilibrist; ballancing, dancing, musical glasses, singing, pantomime entertainments, humorous farces, &c. as at Sadler's Wells. There was likewise a company in St. John's Weend, of eminent performers from London, viz. Francisco, Rayner, &c. in lofty tumbling, vaulting, dancing on the stiff rope; and in several parts of the town were to be seen puppet shows, wild beasts, horses of knowledge, &c. &c. In short, these and many other entertainments, adapted to the peculiar taste of people of every rank, diffused that cheerfulness and good humour among all, which constitutes the true happiness of society. It may not be improper to subjoin, that the Guild-hall, (an elegant structure, designed by Mr. Carr, an eminent architect in York) was lately erected for the aforesaid occasion, by the mayor and the corporation, at their own expence. The state room whereof, and the adjoining Town-hall (a spacious chamber) were, every assembly and ball night, illuminated with some hundreds of wax tapers, in several grand chandeliers, girandoles, and sconces. It is said that the expence of the candles alone amounted to 200*l*. These two rooms, being united, were capable of containing near one thousand people; which number, it was conjectured by many, appeared therein each ball night.

Large quantities of ale and beer, and cold provisions of all sorts, were ordered to be distributed among the populace each day. For the rest, we have only to observe, that every stranger seemed much pleased at the reception they met with from the gentlemen of the corporation and town, and the rest of the inhabitants; and the inhabitants appeared highly satisfied with the civil and cheerful behaviour of their respective guests; and with the liberal, and in every respect satisfactory conduct of the mayor, who was singularly studious to please, and to inspire mirth and festivity into every individual.

An Account of Preston Guild, as held in 1782, from the Liverpool General Advertiser, September 19, 1782.

“The guild at Preston, was, we are assured, honoured with the appearance of a more numerous and splendid assemblage of personages, of the first rank and fortune, than ever graced that place on any similar occasion. Messrs. Austen and Whitlock’s company of comedians performed each night, to audiences not less crowded than they were judicious and respectable; the boxes in particular, (which were filled every evening,) exhibited scenes of beauty and elegance, such as are rarely to be met with even in the theatres of the metropolis; nor were the performances in any respect unworthy of such distinguished patronage, none but the newest and most celebrated pieces being represented during the fortnight, all of which, we have authority to say, were got up and performed with that chasteness and regularity which has long given this company the pre-eminence over every other out of London. In a word, the plays, oratorios, masquerades, assemblies, and races, formed a diversity of amusements for every description of taste, and greatly contributed to make up a degree of refulgence such as no former period has equalled, nor is it probable that any future one will surpass. There were upwards of three hundred people at the masquerade, on Tuesday se'nnight, a number of which assumed characters, which were extraordinarily well supported."

Preston Guild, as held Monday, August 30, 1802.

The guild commenced under the most pleasing auspices imaginable, assisted by as favourable weather as could possibly be desired. The immense concourse of persons of all ranks, was such, it was believed, as was never before collected, on any similar occasion. The morning was ushered in with the ringing of bells, and sounding of trumpets. At the different inns where the various companies were to assemble, colours or flags were seen flying from the windows; and bands of music were heard playing. This was calling forth all to enjoy the jubilee.

The gentlemen's procession commenced on the morning aforesaid, immediately after breakfast, and was preceded by the marshall, armed cap-a-pee, on horseback, trumpeters on horseback, &c. Then came twenty-four young, handsome women, belonging to the various cotton-mills of the town, dressed in a uniform of peculiar and chaste simplicity. Their dress consisted entirely of the manufacture of the town. The ground petticoats consisted of fine white calico; the head-dress was a kind of blue feathered wreath, formed very curiously of cotton, so as to have the appearance of a garland: each girl carried in her hand the branch of an artificial cotton tree, as being the symbol of her profession. These branches appeared as if they were in full bloom, and bore a strong resemblance to nature. The ingenuity with which they were formed, and their execution, reflected great credit on the taste displayed by Mrs. Horrocks, and the female part of her family who made them. This portion of the spectacle had a truly natural and pleasing effect. The various nobility and gentry, together with others, walked in pairs, preceded by the Earl of Derby, and the Hon. Thomas Erskine. They amounted to about four hundred, consisting of all the principal noblemen, gentlemen, merchants, manufacturers, and tradesmen of this and the neighbouring counties. At the head of the manufacturers were John Horrocks, Esq. M.P. and John Watson, Esq. arm in arm, (the two principal and indeed rival manufacturers of the county,) carrying white wands in their hands; upwards of one hundred workmen and mechanics followed them in pairs. They paraded through all the principal streets of the town, attended by bands of music; and flags, bearing painted thereon, the coat armour of the respective trade or profession, and then proceeded to the parish church.

In the course of the procession came the worthy mayor, Nicholas Grimshaw, Esq. with his maces, the recorder, bailiffs, aldermen, common-councilmen, halberd-men, and other corporation officers, such as the town-crier, beadle, &c. as likewise all the various companies or incorporated bodies, headed by their respective wardens, with staves of office, in their state dresses, and with their usual insignia ; also one of the lodges of free and accepted masons, all in their appropriate dresses and decorations. The excellent band of the 17th regiment of light dragoons preceded the corporate body, all in full dress, and their officers in new clothing.

The company of butchers, in uniform and characteristic dresses, and those of the tanners, skimmers, and glovers, habited in like manner, closed the whole. The other companies were the wool-combers', spinners', and weavers' ; the carpenters' company, the vintners' company, the tailors' company, the smiths' company, (joined by the plumbers', painters', glaziers', and watch-makers',) and the mercers' and drapers' company. Each company was preceded by a band of music, and a very elegant flag, bearing appropriate devices, &c.

The tailors' company was attended by a man and woman decorated with fig leaves, an emblem of the very high antiquity of their business. The Eve, though selected from among the fair Lancasterian witches, looked so bewitching on this occasion, as to gain the admiration of all spectators.

The butchers' company was about forty in number, they had all new white aprons, and steels hung to them ; and twelve of their sons walked in the procession, dressed in a similar uniform. All of them had white and red ribbands in their hats.

The farriers' company was led by a man completely attired in steel armour, elegantly ornamented, his armour, cap-a-pee, was decorated with a fine plume of feathers; his horse was caparisoned with a scarlet saddle-cloth, ornamented with gold fringe, which gave him a stately and princely appearance. This personage represented Vulcan; he was followed by eight boys, with their hair powdered, without coats and waistcoats, their shirts being embossed with blue ribbands; they carried white staves in their hands, with gilt heads. The farriers followed, with new blue jackets and trowsers; the jackets had red collars. They wore red caps, with gilt tassels at the top, and ermine fronts.

The tanners' company wore green ribbands in their hats, and oak leaves, expressive of their business; most of them were attired in blue coats.

The cordwainers' company, to the number of forty, wore red morocco aprons, bound with light blue ribbands, and sashes thrown over their shoulders, bearing appropriate inscriptions; they were followed by a number of apprentices, bearing aloft, on long poles, all the various fashions of ladies' and gentlemen's shoes.

Sixty brethren belonging to the Freemason's lodge of Peace and Unity, No. 565, walked in due procession.

After divine service, the procession paraded the streets in the same order as they had gone to church, and then broke up at the Guild-hall, where they had first assembled, about nine o'clock in the morning.

Two very striking emblematical devices occurred in the procession; one was a machine, or sort of car, with a spinning jenny on it, worked by a boy, characteristically attired, and drawn by fourteen men, uniformly and elegantly dressed in calico. The other was a similar machine, with a loom drawn on a sledge, at which was a girl working with bobbins: this was also drawn by fourteen men, dressed in a uniform similar to the other.

After the procession, N. Grimshaw, Esq. the mayor, entertained the gentlemen with a sumptuous dinner. The mayoress, Mrs. Grimshaw, likewise entertained the ladies on the following day.

Tuesday was fixed upon for the ladies' procession; a numerous body of gentlemen walked before them, and filed off, forming a line on each side of the street, through which the ladies had to pass. The girls from the various cotton manufactories led the van as before; afterwards came the ladies, two and two. The Rev. Humphrey Shuttleworth, A.M. vicar of the parish church, and the Queen of the Guild, (the mayoress,) walked first; after them came the Countess of Derby, and Lady Charlotte Hornby; Lady Stanley, daughter of the Earl of Derby, and Lady Anne Lindsay; Lady Susan Carpenter, and the Hon. Mrs. Cawthorne; Lady Gerrard, and Lady Hoghton; Lady Jerningham, and Lady Fitzgerald. Several other baronets' ladies, and the residue of the other ladies followed, walking in pairs; in all nearly four hundred in number, consisting of the most noble and distinguished ladies in this and the neighbouring counties. They were superbly attired, and elegantly adorned with a profusion of the most inestimable jewels. This part of the fete (especially the first coup d'œil, when the ladies had all got out of the Guild-hall into the street,) comprehending such a brilliant display of beauty, elegance, and fashion, deservedly attracted universal attention and admiration from all present, and thereby produced one of the grandest, most uncommon, and charming sights ever beheld in this town.

After attending the mayoress to church, and hearing divine service, the ladies paraded in the same order round the market place.

In the course of the procession, a complete steam-engine in miniature, at full work, was exhibited, performing all the various evolutions of the cotton manufactory, and was attended by fourteen men, in uniform dresses, similar to those mentioned heretofore. This very curious, rare, and singular piece of mechanism, attracted great attention.

The spectacle of this day was, by far, the most brilliant and gratifying of the whole festival. So splendid an exhibition of female attractions has seldom been witnessed in this part of the country, indeed every possible variety of taste, elegance, and art were displayed by both sexes during the whole carnival, in costume, ornaments, and decorations. Some of the dresses worn by the ladies, on this occasion, were said to be worth more than ten thousand pounds.

Splendid assemblies were given in the Guild-hall, (tickets ten shillings and sixpence each,) which were uncommonly crowded. Balls were also held, of which four hundred tickets were generally sold. The crowd was so great, that dancing, upon these occasions, was scarcely practicable. The new theatre royal, a very elegant and convenient edifice, was well attended by large audiences, every night at double prices: a great part of the pit had been laid into boxes; notwithstanding which, scarcely a place was to be had on the most of the nights. Great merit was due to Mr. John Stanton, the manager, for his spirited conduct in bringing some of the first-rate performers down from London, to amuse the town at this pleasing fête. Miscellaneous concerts were performed in the evenings, where Mr. Haydn, Mr. Meredith, Mr. Hill, Mrs. Atkins, Miss Cheese, Mr. Cimador, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Yaniewitz, Madame Dussec, and Mr. Harvey, exerted their musical abilities to crowded and brilliant audiences. There was a grand masquerade ball, (tickets one guinea each,) held in the Guild-hall, where many original, singular, grotesque, and odd figures were personated, by some of the first families of distinction. Pidcock's menagerie was here, with an extensive collection of wild beasts, and foreign birds. The celebrated Mr. Ireland, the flying phenomenon, exerted himself, to the great astonishment of every beholder. Hair-dressers, cooks, confectioners, milliners, haberdashers, &c. &c. came here in numbers, from various parts of the kingdom, during this interesting spectacle.

The prodigious concourse of visitors, especially those of the higher ranks, was such as to excite the astonishment of all the townsmen. More than two hundred carriages were daily parading the public streets. The races began on Wednesday, and the concourse of people on Fullwood-moor, was greater than ever before remembered, and presented an interesting scene during this year's guild.

The ensuing Guild will commence on Monday the 2d of September, 1822. Nicholas Grimshaw, Esq. Mayor.

Some Account of the Duchy and County Palatine of Lancaster.

Lancaster was erected into a County Palatine the 50th of Edward III. and granted by that king to his son John for life, and that he should have a king-like power to pardon treasons, outlawrys, &c. and to make justices of the peace, and justices of assize, within the said county, and all processes and indictments to be in his name. There are two seals, one for the County Palatine, and one for the Duchy; the last is used for lands that lie out of the County Palatine, because the Duchy have not jure regalia over those lands; the statute of the 37th Henry VIII., annexed lands to the Duchy for the enlargement of it; fines levied before the justices of assize of Lancaster, of lands in the County Palatine, shall be of equal force with those before the justices of the Common Pleas. Process against an outlawed person in the County Palatine of Lancaster, must be directed to the Chancellor of the Duchy, who shall thereupon issue like writs to the sheriff. The statute of the 17th Charles II. enacts concerning causes of replevin shall be of force in the court of Common Pleas, in the County Palatine; by the statute of the 17th of George II., the chancellor or vice-chancellor, may empower persons to take affidavits in any cause depending, in any plea whatsoever, civil or criminal; by the statute 34th

George III. the chancellor or vice-chancellor may authorise persons to take special bail in actions depending in the Court of Common Pleas of the said county. This Duchy was the property of Henry Bolingbroke, at the time he wrested the crown from Richard II., but he was too prudent to suffer this to be united to the crown, it being his by sure and indefeasible title, his title to the crown was not so assured, therefore he procured an act of parliament the first year of his reign, ordaining the Duchy of Lancaster and all his hereditary estates, with all these royalties and franchises, should remain to him and his heirs for ever, and be administered and governed in like manner, as if he never had attained the regal dignity; his grandson Henry VI. being attainted 1st of Edward IV. this Duchy was declared to be forfeited to the crown; but at the same time an act was made to incorporate it, and make the same King Edward IV. and his heirs kings of England for ever, but under a separate guiding and governance from the other inheritances of the crown. On the 1st of Henry VII. another act was passed, vesting the inheritance of the whole to the king and his heirs for ever, as amply and largely, and in like manner, form, and condition, separate from the crown of England and possession of the same.

The public offices incident to this court are stationed at Preston, except during the assizes, when they are removed to Lancaster. The officers of the Court of Chancery consist of five clerks in court, and cursitors of the county have the registrar, examiner, and chief clerk, with whom is filed all equity proceedings; the registrar officiates himself, or by deputy, in the vice-chancellor's court at Lancaster, or in the Sessions-hall at Preston; the acting cursitor is in general one of the chancery clerks, whose duty it is to issue original writs, mandates upon writs directed to the chancellor from the courts of Westminster, and he has a distinct office for that purpose; the seal keeper of the county, whose duty is to seal all writs, process, patents, and grants of Duchy lands; the prothonotary or officer of the court of Common Pleas, from whose office issues all mesne process; he either officiates in person or by deputy at the sessions; but during the assizes at Lancaster, the clerk of the crown has his office at Preston; he has the custody of all criminal proceedings, and officiates himself or by deputy; the clerk of the peace for the county is an officer of the courts of general and quarter sessions; the office of sheriff for the county is kept here, and a resident attorney is generally appointed under sheriff; the county treasurer has also his office in the town. The chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, is an officer before whom, or his deputy, the court of the Duchy chamber of Lancaster is held. This is a special jurisdiction concerning all manner of equity relating to lands holden of the king in right of the Duchy of Lancaster.

This is a thing very distinct from the County Palatine, which hath also its separate chancery for the sealing of writs and the like. This Duchy comprises much territory, which lies at a vast distance from the county, as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as on the equity side of the courts of Exchequer and Chancery, so that it seems not to be a court of record; and it has been holden, that these courts have a concurrent jurisdiction with the Duchy court, and may take cognizance of the same causes.

The duchy court is held at Lancaster castle, and at Preston ; the vice-chancellor generally presides.

There is also a court in Westminster, called the Duchy Court of Lancaster, where all cases any way relating to the revenue of the duchy of Lancaster are tried, and the court established for the same purpose at Preston, is a branch of the Westminster court, and is called the Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster. These courts were established by King Henry IV. after having deposed Richard II. when possessing the duchy of Lancaster in right of his mother, he imagined he had a better claim to it than to the throne, which he had usurped, he therefore separated it from the crown, and erected those courts for its use. The chief judge is the chancellor, under whom are a set of regular officers for the dispatch of business in the county, as well as the duchy court. The following is the present list:—

Birch’s MSS.

Edward III. not only gave to his favourite son John the dukedom of Lancaster, but he made the county a palatine. The following are the words of the grant: “ We have granted for us and our heirs to our son John, for the great service he has done his country, that he, during the term of his life, shall have within the county of Lancaster his chancery, and his writs to be issued out and under his own seal* belonging to the office of chancellor; his justices likewise, as well for the pleas of the crown, as for other pleas relating to the common law, to have recognizance of them, and to have power of making all executions whatsoever by his writs and officers, and to have all other liberties and royalties of what kind soever, as appertaining to a county palatine, as freely and fully as the Earl of Chester within the said county is known to have, &c. &c.”*

There was anciently no other seal by which to grant or demise the duchy lands except the great seal of England; but in 3 Henry V. it was established that “no part of the duchy land, nor any thing belonging to the same, shall pass or be conveyed by any other than a seal expressly made for the use of the Duchy of Lancaster.”

When Henry de Bullingbroke had deposed his cousin, Richard II., he conferred the honour of Lancaster upon his son, afterward Henry V.; and that he might entail it upon him and his heirs for ever, he caused an act of parliament to be framed in these words:—“We being unwilling, our said inheritance or its liberties, by reason of our now assuming royal state and dignity, should be in any ways changed, transferred, diminished, or impaired, but that our said inheritance with its rights and liberties aforesaid, should be in the same manner and form wherein they descended and fell to us, and also with all and singular liberties, franchises, and other privileges, commodities, and profit whatsoever, which our lord and father in his life-time had and held it for term of his life, by the grant of the late King Richard, be wholly and fully preserved, continued, and enjoyed by us, and our heirs, specified in the said charters by the tenure of these presents, we do upon our certain knowledge, and with the consent of this our present parliament, grant, declare, decree, and ordain, for us, our heirs, that as well our Duchy of Lancaster, as all and singular counties, honors, castles, manors, fees, advowsons, possessions, annuities, and seigniories whatsoever, descended to us before the royal dignity was obtained by us, how, and in what place soever, by right of inheritance, in possession, or in reversion, upon their shields, but to be better known had the like depicted upon surcotes of silk behind and before, which they wore over their mail, (hence called coat of arms); but after this, ere long, divers bore their arms on fair, large, and deep shields; on their scabb, and some on the reverse, where the picture on horseback was on the other side. Howbeit in Edward the 1st days and after, most men began to leave off their pictures on horseback on their seals, which custom, by degrees declining, was intirely given over about 1356. or other way, remain to us and our said heirs specified in the charters aforesaid, after the said manner for ever."

Henry V., by act of parliament, annexed to the Duchy of Lancaster a very great estate which had fallen to him in right of his mother, Dame Mary, daughter and co-heiress of Humphry Bohun, Earl of Hereford.

Henry VI. was deposed and murdered by Richard III. in the presence of his brother Edward IV., who succeeded to the throne in 1461; and the House of York ruled in the persons of Edward IV., V., and Richard III. for 25½ years.

In the 1st of Edward IV. Henry de Bullingbroke, although he had been dead upwards of 15 years, was, with many other persons, attainted of high treason, and the Duchy of Lancaster annexed to the crown, subject, however, to such officers and justices as governed it in the times of Henry IV., V., VI.

In the 1st of Henry VII. when the York and Lancaster parties were happily united, the act of Edward IV. was repealed, and the entail to the crown cut off. We have already given a list of the officers of the county and duchy. In Camden's time there were a chancellor, an attorney, a receiver, clerk of the court, six assessors, a messenger, two auditors, three and twenty receivers, and three supervisors.*

Since the reign of Henry V. the estates of the Duchy of Lancaster had been greatly reduced: the alienation of the possessions of the Yorkists, which served to support the court in the time of Henry VII., and that of the church during the time of Henry VIII. and Eliz. made room upon easy terms of purchase for an additional number of gentry. The stewards disposed of many parts of the duchy property. We will here extract, from the original grant, some particulars of one sale which was made.

"March 21st, in the 20th James I., a patent was granted by the king, under the great seal of the county, and the seal of the duchy, without any fee, great or small, for sealing, for the sum of two thousand pounds, then paid by Edward Badbie and William Welden, of London, confirmed by writ of privy seal, signed by Tong and Pye, whereof Thomas Parker, Esq., Francis Empton, John Chester, Christopher Parker, were appointed attornies, to give possession

The following rights and privileges were also granted. All and singular advowsons, donations, and free dispositions, and rights of patronage, in all churches, vicarages, chapels, prebends, and other benefices whatsoever, to the premises before granted, or to any part or parcel thereof, in any way belonging, appertaining, incident, appendant, or incumbent, all mills, houses, stables, dove-houses, wastes, &c., tythes of sheaves of corn, grain, and hay, wool, flax, hemp, and lambs, and all other great and small tythes, also all oblations, obventions, fruits and profits, fishery, fishings, suits, fines, warren, mineral, rents, revenues, services of free and customary tenants, rents, seck works of tenants, fee farms, knights' fees, marriages, wards, escheates, reliefs, heriots, fines, amercements, free warren, courts, views of frank pledge of courts and leets, perquisites and profits of all that to court leet and frank pledge doth belong, chattels, waifs, estrays, natives and villains with their followers, estovers and commons of estovers, fairs, markets, tolls, customs, rights, jurisdictions, franchises, liberties, and privileges, profits, commodities, advantages and hereditaments of us the king, &c. &c. &c. In 1811, the fee farm rents of many of these estates in the forest of Bowland were sold, they had been conveyed to the Duke of St. Alban's by Charles II., who also granted other parts of Bowland forest to General Monk, afterwards Duke of Albermarle; he died 1669, leaving one son; he married Lady Elizabeth Cavendish. She afterwards married Ralph Montagu, created, in 1705, Duke of Montague. He died 1709, and she without issue, 1734, when the estates of Earl of Albermarle, in Bowland, passed to the successors of this Ralph Duke of Montagu, now the Duke of Buccleugh.

In the same way did Charles I., in the fourth year of his reign, 1629, sell the manor of West Derby Everton, and various other places. Everton was part of the duchy lands.

Account of the Public Records of the Duchy of Lancaster, &c.

Extract from the return from the deputy clerk of the council and keeper of the records, Robert John Harper, Esq. to several questions contained in an order of the select committee on the public records of this kingdom.

Such only are considered as public, and open for public inspection, as any wise relate to or concern judicial proceedings, the remainder being collected for the purpose of better managing and improving the inheritance of his Majesty's possessions, in right of his Duchy of Lancaster; and the officers of the duchy think themselves at liberty to withhold them from public inspection, except for the purposes before mentioned, or by command of his Majesty, as Duke of Lancaster, signified by his chancellor of the duchy.

The answer to the first question is contained in the following list of records in the office of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Account of the purchase money arising from the sale of rents under the several acts of parliament, 20 George III., 1780, to the present time.

Awards for inclosures in which the duchy property has been concerned, 27 Geo. II., 1754, to present time.

Bills and answers, and depositions in the duchy court of Lancaster, and of such as have been transmitted from the county palatine to be heard in the duchy court, 1 Hen. VII., 1485.

Charters and grants of various kings under the great seal, as well as of private persons (remaining in boxes) to the king's sons, and to ecclesiastical persons, of lands within the surveys of the duchy, 1 King Stephen, 1135, to 10 Queen Elizabeth, 1568.

Charters and grants in fee farm, some of which are inrolled in the office, and others remain on parchment, with the royal sign manual. The original charters of the duchy and county palatine to the king's son, and grants of lands to individuals of the possessions of the duchy, 51 Edward III., 1377, to 1 Queen Anne, 1702.

Court rolls of such manors as formerly belonged to the duchy, and have since been granted away, and of such as are at present demised by leases under the duchy seal, 1283, to the present time.

Decrees of the duchy court inrolled in books, and some of the drafts with the attorney general's signature, 1 Henry VII., 1485, to the present time.

Grants of rents under the several acts to enable the chancellor and council to dispose of the fee farm and other rents, and to enfranchise copyhold estates, 20 Geo. III., 1780, to the present time.

Inquisitions, post Mortem, consisting of 2400 of various lands and tenements within all the counties in England, 1 Hen. V., 1413, to 18 Cha. I., 1642.

Leases, drafts, and inrolments of such as have passed the duchy seal of lands and tenements, parcel of the possessions of the duchy, 1 Hen. VIII., 1510, to the present time.

Ministers and receiver's accounts of the rents and revenues of the duchy, 1135, to the present time.

Patents of offices granted under the duchy seal, 1 Hen. VIII., 1510, to the present time.

Rentals and particulars of land belonging to the duchy collected together in bags and preases, and consisting of various other documents of such descriptions that they cannot be comprized under one head, registered into counties, and in the catalogue are the names of places alphabetically arranged, 51 Edward III., 1377, to the present time.

Registers of leases, warrants, grants, and other documents under royal signs manual, inrolled in books of John Duke of Lancaster, in the time of Edward the Third, and of various kings, relating to the possessions of the duchy, 51 Edward III., 1377, to 8 Henry VI. 1430.

Revenue proceedings of the duchy court, inrolled in books, 6 Charles I., 1630, to the present time.

Special commissions of sewers, and to survey estates belonging to the duchy, 23 Elizabeth, to the present time.

Privy seals and bills, being the particulars prepared previous to the granting any leases or offices under the duchy seal, 1 James I. to the present time.

As the records yearly increase, more room will be wanted at some future period for the accommodation of them. The office was appropriated to the use of the Duchy of Lancaster, under the act for erecting the buildings at Somerset House, and is therefore public property. But this office was given to the duchy in consideration of accommodations and concessions made by his majesty in right of his duchy, from such parts of the manor of the Savoy as belonged to the duchy.

I am employed in the arrangement of the records myself, and a clerk assists me in placing and replacing them, for which no salary or allowance whatsoever is paid, but a fee of 6s. 8d. is charged for the production of each record, which is the sole allowance, as well for the trouble and producing them, as for arranging them and keeping them in proper preservation, and for making the indexes, repertories, and calendars; and the further sum of 1s. is charged per folio per copies, or 16*d*. if there is any considerable difficulty arising from the antiquity or language of the record. Attendance with the records themselves is so seldom demanded that no fee has been regularly settled for that purpose, but if in London, a charge is made of one guinea besides the coach-hire, and if in the country two guineas a day with the travelling charges, and all other expences would be expected. No account has been kept of the profits derived by searches for public records, independent of those where fees have been received for other searches, from whence any average can be taken.

There are several inquisitions, post mortem traverses, and other inquisitions of divers kinds remaining in this office under my care, commencing in the beginning of the reign of Henry V., and finishing 18 Charles I., amounting to nearly 2400 in number, some of which consist of many large skins of parchment put on files, in several bundles, secured from future injuries by strong covers, and to which there is a regular alphabetical index and calendar in one volume, divided into the several reigns of the kings before mentioned, and containing the names of persons, and all places mentioned in each inquisition, omitting none that are legible. The first directing immediately to the several lands each person died possessed of; the other referring to each inquisition in which any particular lands are to be found.

I know of no objection to publishing the above index if it should be thought conducive to the public benefit, and understand it will fill about 90 pages when printed *.

* If these inquisitions, like those from folio 67 to 121, were printed, as well as the collection in the Bodleian Library, from Henry V. to Charles I., an invaluable register of property for the County Palatine and Duchy of Lancaster would be found, and which we hope to see printed at the expense of the county or the public, as the other records are.
